40 DIE, 100 HURT SO FAR IN CASTE FEUD IN RAMNAD

MADRAS, September 21. FORTY PERSONS HAVE BEEN KILLED SO FAR IN POLICE FIRINGS AND CASTE FEUDS IN THE DISTRICT OF RAMANATHAPURAM, WHERE TWO COMMUNITIES, MARAVARS AND HARIJANS, HAVE CLASHED WITH ARMS, SWORDS AND SPEARS AT A NUMBER OF PLACES.

There is panic in the district and many members of the affected minority community have fled their villages to take shelter in rail heads and in the city of Madurai.

The Maravars are a community of caste Hindus claiming to be an ancient warrior tribe. Pitted against them are the Harijans, many of whom are Christians.

The riots started over the murder of a Harijan Christian by a mob of Maravars on September 11 at a bus stand in the village of Paramakudi.

Four days later, the two communities clashed in strength in another near-by village.

The Harijan's murder was the immediate provocation, but feelings had been strained between the two communities since the last general elections which were fought in the district with a dominant caste bias.

FEUD SPREADS

The feud spread to several villages. Mobs of armed men wandered about in revengeful mood to attack the members of the other community. At places rows of huts were burned; shots exchanged; swords and spears clashed. At one place, the doors of a church where some Harijans had sought sanctuary, were set on fire and its window panes smashed; the refugees were pursued to the altar.

The first police firing took place on September 14 in a village of Mudukulathur.

The members of a community of that village put a barricade against the police party which was entering the village to seize some men wanted for alleged rioting. The circumstances which led to the firing are now under public inquiry.

Two days later, in another village, the mobs of the two communities clashed in which six persons were killed and many houses burned down. It was time for the armed police to move into the interior and take position. Groups of troubled villages were patrolled, but the riot spread from one village to another.

To date as many as five taluks of the district are trouble spots where over a dozen clashes have occurred and half-a-dozen police firings ordered.

According to official reports 40 persons have been killed and over a hundred injured. How many huts have been burned down has not yet been estimated.

It cannot be said that the situation till now is under control. But the armed police have moved in to mop up riotous men who escape to unprotected villages before the pursuing police force. Nearly a thousand men have been locked up.

PEACE EFFORT

Meanwhile, both official and non-official efforts to restore peace in the riot-ridden area have been intensified.

Yesterday the President of India, Dr. Rajendra Prasad, in a statement from Madras, expressed his pain and sorrow over this internecine dispute and appealed to the communities to re-establish the good relations between them.

The Chief Minister of Madras, Mr. Kamaraj Nadar, has appealed to the people to be calm and restore the friendship and good will which has marked the relations between the two now warring communities.

Besides, there have been several appeals from noted public men of the State asking the people to work for peace.

GOVERNOR'S CALL

The Governor of Madras, Mr. A. J. John, today expressed his deep distress at the clashes between Maravars and Harijans in Mudukulathur and other areas and appealed to both the communities to co-operate with the authorities and come to an understanding among themselves by peaceful negotiations and thus maintain the fair name of the South.

The Governor said "I am deeply distressed to see reports of disturbance and armed clashes between Maravars and Harijans in the Mudukulathur and certain other taluks of Ramanathapuram district. A number of precious lives have been lost and considerable property damaged on account of these riots.

"Any dispute can be settled by mutual understanding and trust. I hope the leaders of both the sections will strive for creating a climate for such understanding and agreement. Nothing can be gained by resorting to violence. Law and order will have to be maintained.

STERLING FAILS TO IMPROVE

Chronicle Correspondent

P. T. Chandra

LONDON, September 21.

British Government's action in raising the bank rate has had little impact on foreign bankers and traders so far. The sterling has failed to improve and official support was again needed yesterday.

It is feared that speculative movement may be intensified if there is no improvement in the sterling position in the next few days.

German financial circles feel that the British action is intended to influence the course of next week's meeting of the International Monetary Fund in Washington.

They allege that Britain is trying to blackmail America into supporting the revaluation of the mark.

But here it is believed that Britain is determined to prevent the devaluation of the pound and would not hesitate to take more drastic steps if necessary.

It would ask the industry to refuse demands for wage increase. If there are strikes it is prepared to face them.

Congress M.L.A. Unseated

PATNA, Sept. 21.

The election of Mr. Manzoor Ahmad (Congress) to the Bihar Legislative Assembly from Nawadah constituency was declared void by the one-member tribunal of Mr. A. K. Saran at Gaya yesterday, according to a report received here today.

The election of Mr. Manzoor Ahmad was challenged by Mr. Bodhi Lal, a Jharkhand League, on the ground that the latter's nomination paper was rejected improperly by the returning officer, Mr. S. N. Prasad, sub-divisional officer, Nawadah.

The tribunal recorded evidence from witnesses of both the sides and held that the election of Mr. Ahmad to the Bihar Assembly was null and void.—UPI.

TTK To Meet Adams

WASHINGTON, Sept. 21.

Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari who arrived at Washington's National airport was asked by reporters if he was carrying a personal letter from Premier Nehru to President Eisenhower.

There is no truth in such reports, he emphatically pointed out. Mr. Krishnamachari will see presidential assistant Sherman Adams, at the White House at 7 a.m. (EST) today.

He said he will discuss problems of mutual interest with Adams. He declined to comment on the possibility of a 500-million dollar loan from the United States.—UPI-APF.

Workers Will Help Manage Mill In Indore

BHOPAL, September 21. THE Labour Minister of Madhya Pradesh, Mr. V. V. Dravid, said the State Government would introduce workers' participation in management in a textile mill in Indore.

The process of co-ordination, he said, in respect of matters affecting workers had long been in operation in Indore and he hoped that their participation in management would lead to industrial democracy "suited to our conditions."

Mr. Dravid, addressing a Press conference, said that the Benefit Act would be revised with the object of increasing the paid rest period. A few other improvements would also be effected.

The Labour Minister disclosed that his department had initiated the necessary action to enforce the legal provisions relating to the service conditions of journalists.

A Bill governing conditions of work of employees in shops and commercial establishments in the new State was under preparation, to replace the regional legislation in Madhya Bharat and Mahakoshal regions.

Cochin Man Traces Father After 42 Years' Search

TRIVANDRUM, Sept. 21.

ENQUIRIES conducted by the Scotland Yard in the United Kingdom at the request of Joseph Gabriel of Cochin have led to the discovery of the whereabouts of his father who left home three months before Joseph was born.

Ande Gabriel, a Cochin workman, casually stepped out of his home in his Sunday clothes just before lunch-time after returning from church a few minutes earlier. That was 42 years ago. His wife and children are still waiting for him to come back.

A few days after he disappeared, his wife learned that he had been seen getting into a train. He told his friends he was going to Mysore in search of a job.

The year was 1915; the First World War was on, and jobs were not hard to find. The woman and children lived on in the hope of hearing from him soon.

Three years had passed, however, before she heard from him. She then received a letter and 10 rupees which he had sent from Bombay. She wrote to the Bombay address given by him, but got no reply.

The next letter, posted at Rangoon, said he was proceeding to Liverpool.

Years rolled on, with no further news of the man. The woman opened a sweetmeat stall to support herself and the children. Her own people asked her to leave the children with the husband's relations and to go and live with her father.

She rejected the advice and lived on with the children, brought them up and educated them to the best of her means.

Then, in 1944, the missing man's brother received a letter from Glasgow, asking for news of the family. A cable was sent in reply, but it failed to find the addressee.

Eight years later came a note despatched from Hull. It was signed "Andrews" and inquired after the family's welfare. The note did not explain who Andrews was, but the recipients did not have to guess.

The youngest son, Joseph, now 42, has been the most insistent about tracing the father whom he had not seen. He wrote to the Indian High Commission in London. He also addressed letters to the Chief Constable of Hull. But these brought no results.

Finally, he wrote to the Scotland Yard. Their inquiries brought out the fact that the Andrews who had sent the note from Hull was actually Ande Gabriel himself.

Later, Scotland Yard sent to the Gabriel family a photograph of the man and his present address. Gabriel lives in Hull, and is employed in the dockyard there.

He has written to his family once or twice since then. He also sends them money. He asked for a family photograph, and was sent one. But never has he mentioned a word yet about coming home.

His wife, 28 at the time he left her, is now 70, but she still expects to see him again.

Burma Rebel Treated As Hero In Pak

RANGOON, Sept. 21.

A Burmese Member of Parliament said today Pakistan was being "unfriendly towards a neighbouring nation" in refusing to extradite Burmese rebel leader Kasim, who had taken refuge in Pakistan.

Kasim, leader of the Muslims in the Arakan region in Burma, was first imprisoned when he fled to Pakistan, but was recently released and "treated as a hero" by the Pakistan Press, he said.

He expressed the fears that Kasim might resume his terrorist activities again.

Burmese Interior Minister Thakin The Khin said that the Pakistan had been sent to the Pakistani Government.

The Pakistani Government said Kasim's liberation had been part of a general amnesty. The rebel leader was strictly forbidden to return to Burma, it said.

The Minister said that the negotiations for Kasim's extradition had been suspended.—UPI-APF.

SHILLONG: Investigations show that last week's raid on the residence of Mr. B. Changakol, treasury officer, Kohima, was the work of four or five burglars, and not of 40 Naga hostiles as reported in the Press.

Fire In Plane's Engine Two Abortive Attempts To Get Air-Borne

CHRONICLE SPECIAL

By Staff Reporter IQBAL KHAN

BOMBAY, Saturday.

TWENTY-FIVE BRITISH SCHOOL CHILDREN, WHO HAD COME OUT TO INDIA ON A LONG HOLIDAY, SAT WITH BATED BREATH IN AN AIR INDIA INTERNATIONAL PLANE, "RANI OF NILGIRIS," BOUND FOR LONDON, WHEN SHE MADE TWO UNSUCCESSFUL ATTEMPTS TO TAKE OFF FROM THE SANTA CRUZ AIRPORT LAST NIGHT.

The aircraft tried to climb twice, but each time the power in one of the engines failed and the plane hit the runway dangerously.

The teachers and parents of the school children watched with fear.

The children, whose ages ranged from three months to 14 years, were returning to the United Kingdom after spending their vacation with their parents and relations here.

FIRE ALARM

During these abortive take-offs, the pilot of the aircraft suddenly noted the fire alarm indicated on the dash-board.

Efforts, it is said, were also made to set the engine right by working its propeller "in the reverse."

As soon as it was found that the engine had caught fire, the aircraft was handed over to the engineering personnel who repaired it and the plane then left without any mishap.

An Indian professor, who was also flying by the same plane, got very panicky after the incident, and started raving at the management of the Air India International.

A top official of the air company who was present at the airport to see off his son, tried to pacify the professor by pointing out that it was no use assailing them for the mishap.

He is reported to have pointed out that his son was also on the "Rani of Nilgiris" and ran as much risk as any other passenger.

The professor retorted: "What do you care, you may be having a dozen children."

More Pakistanis Arrested

AHMEDABAD, Sept. 21. Eight more Pakistani nationals were arrested by the Ahmedabad police here today for staying beyond the permitted period.

All the arrested persons were produced before a magistrate and were released on bail subsequently.

In the last two days, the Ahmedabad police arrested 19 Pakistani nationals in all.

The police had recently served notices on 150 Pakistanis for showing cause why action should not be taken against them for their overstay in India.—UPI.

CONGESTION CLEARED IN BOMBAY PORT

NEW DELHI, September 21. As a result of the measures taken to expedite the turn-around of shipping and minimise delays at Indian ports, port conditions appear to be fast returning to normal.

At the Bombay Port, where as many as 47 ships were waiting for berths on July 17, the position today is that there is no general cargo vessel waiting for a berth.

Only two deep-drafted food ships are waiting in stream due to unfavourable tide conditions. The capacity of the Bombay Port for cargo handling is expected to improve still further when 8 mobile cranes, an order for which has just been placed, are put into commission.

These cranes are to be installed in the bunders for handling a greater volume of lighterage traffic.

At Calcutta, the position has greatly eased. Only 15 import ships and 8 export ships are waiting for berths in this port today as against a total of 58 during the worst period of the congestion. The longest period of waiting at Calcutta has also decreased from 28 days in July to 16 days today.

At Madras, where the largest number of ships waiting for berths had touched 22, only 6 ships were waiting on September 18.

The maximum delay at this port also has been reduced from 45 days to 11 days.

At Visakhapatnam, 13 ships are waiting today as compared with 17 ships waiting at the peak period.

Of these 13 ships, 8 are waiting for exporting manganese ores.

The number of ore exporting ships visiting the port is greatly in excess of the berthing capacity.

BOMBAY, Saturday. THREE cobblers who went to demand payment of a loan from two members of their fraternity are alleged to have got angry and stabbed the two persons.

The incident occurred at King's Circle garden when the three cobblers approached the other two who were seated in the garden, last night.

Hot words ensued between them which led to the stabbing of the two persons.

The Kingsway police arrested Laxman Lalman, Baboo Girji and Lalchand Shankar in this connection.

PERSONALITY SPOTLIGHT: New Police Chief Wants To Harness Psychology

By Chronicle Staff Reporter
Dinkar Dharma

BOMBAY, Saturday. Kumar Shri Pravinshiji, the new Chief of the Greater Bombay Police, believes that all policemen should study the psychology of anti-social elements in order to be able to fight crime more effectively.

This was the most striking point made by the Police Chief when I met him this morning soon after he became the new Police Commissioner of Greater Bombay.

Kumar Pravinshiji also believes that to fight crime better the police must actively seek and gain the fullest co-operation and confidence of the public.

A public actively on the side of the law, he believes, would lighten the task of policemen to a great extent.

Discipline, dedication, duty, and scrupulous honesty are the main threads in the fabric of a man like Kumar Pravinshiji.

He brings to his office the accumulated experience and knowledge of breaking crime which he had gained through 26 years of service in the Indian Police force.

Most of his professional career was carved out in this State.

Emphasising his belief in the public as the best and most potent weapon at the disposal of the police in controlling crime, he said: "The doors of my office are always open to the public."

Asked if he had any new plans for reorganisation or strengthening of the police, Kumar Pravinshiji said he was fairly bursting with pet schemes he would like to try out.

"It is better that you and the public see my plans at work, than that I should tell you all about them," he said modestly.

He said that the policeman should leave no stone unturned to convince the public that he was their friend confidant and associate.

In solving crimes and tracking down criminals, he said, knowing the human side of the criminal and being acquainted with every nook and cranny of his beat were the main weapons at the disposal of the police officer.

This knowledge, Kumar Pravinshiji said, could not be gained easily, but slowly, and painstakingly over a long time.

But the dividends at the end would make all the time spent and the effort worthwhile.

During his tenure as Acting Police Commissioner, he said, he made it a habit to drop in unannounced at police stations at night to see how they functioned.

He meant to continue this practice in the future. Ending the Poonia riots soon after Mahatma Gandhi's assassination is the brightest feather in Kumar Pravinshiji's cap of achievements.

All his work shows the innate warmth, devotion to duty and sincerity of Kumar Pravinshiji.

In 1953 he went on an extensive study tour of Europe, including England, where he learnt the criminal detection methods of some of the finest, most modern and the best equipped police forces in the world.

"I mean to introduce some of the things I learnt abroad in the City," he said.

A quiet, modest man, it was difficult to get him to talk about his personal achievements.

FIVE YOUTHS HELD FOR JOY RIDE IN A STOLEN CAR

BOMBAY, Saturday. FIVE ADVENTUROUS YOUTHS WHO WERE PROCEEDING ON A JOY RIDE TO JUHU BEACH IN A CAR, ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN STOLEN FROM NAPOO ROAD, LATE LAST NIGHT, WERE APPREHENDED BY THE KINGSWAY POLICE NEAR MAHIM CAUSEWAY EARLY THIS MORNING.

According to the police Kantilal Mohanlal, a resident of Reishi Bhavan, Napoo Road, Matunga had parked his car, BYK 1362, on the pavement at midnight last night and gone for his meals.

After half an hour, the police added Kantilal who went to the balcony to have a whiff of fresh air found to his surprise that his automobile was missing.

He lodged a complaint with the Kingsway police.

THE POLICE IMMEDIATELY ALERTED THE WIRELESS SQUAD AND AFTER A FRANTIC SEARCH OF NEARLY TWO HOURS TRACED THE MIDNIGHT REVELLERS NEAR MAHIM CAUSEWAY, ALL JAMMED IN THE CAR AND SPEEDING AWAY IN A HOLIDAY MOOD.

The dramatic chase by the police brought their revelry to an abrupt end.

The arrested persons are Murlidar Parshram (21), Laxman Baboo (19), Gunvantar Trikamdas (19), Surali Gopaladas (19) and Pratap Ramdas (19).

Second Wild Life Week

BOMBAY, Saturday. In order to emphasise the need for the preservation of wild life and to seek the co-operation of the public in its preservation and protection, the Wild Life Week will be celebrated all over Bombay from September 23 to 29.

Though this is the second year that this week is being celebrated it is in fact for the first time that the reorganised State of Bombay is celebrating this week.

During the week, the need to preserve some rare species of our fauna from extinction through indiscriminate hunting and destruction will be stressed through appeals, broadcasts, public meetings, film shows, folders cinema slides, etc.

The members of the public will also be called upon to visit National Parks, sanctuaries, zoos, etc.

Three Arrested In Theft Case

BOMBAY, Saturday. Three persons were arrested by the Delisle Road police on suspicion of being involved in a house breaking and theft case of clothes and valuables worth Rs. 800.

Police stated that the alleged house breakers John Joseph, Yakub Palpuswamy and Hanif Mira were arrested by them following information given by persons who knew about the incident.

The police raided the houses of the accused early this morning and found the missing clothes and valuables.

"Ajanta"

HUNDI IS STOLEN: MAN HELD

BOMBAY, Saturday. VINAYAK Chintaman Jodhi alias Jayantilal Mangal was remanded to custody by Chief Presidency Magistrate G. K. Rega, at Esplanade Court this morning for allegedly stealing a hundi worth Rs. 6,000 in transit and trying to cash it.

He was arrested by the Detection of Crime Branch yesterday when he was engaged in cashing the hundi at the peddli of Lakshmi Cotton Traders.

Police said that some time back Kantilal Bhagwanji and Company of Amravati had sent the hundi to Jaswanthilal Kantilal at Bhat Bazar in Bombay.

The hundi was drawn by Lakshmi Industries of Amravati on Lakshmi Cotton Traders Private Limited in Bombay.

Yesterday, when Vinayak went to cash the hundi at the office of Lakshmi Cotton Traders, who were informed of the loss, the police were called in and Vinayak was handed over to them.

'Smuggler' Bailed Out

BOMBAY, Saturday. With the arrest of a man at the Mazagaon Post Office yesterday morning the Byculla Police claim to have busted a gang of narcotics smugglers in the city.

The arrest of the man, who was described as a member of the gang, followed the seizure of two postal parcels which came to the post office from Nautanva, a place in Gorakhpur District, Uttar Pradesh.

The parcels were found to contain 1,469 tolas of ganja valued at Rs. 7,000.

Yesterday morning at 11 Kumtraprasad again came to the post office and inquired about his parcels which were informed that two parcels had come.

He immediately produced the receipts for the packets and took delivery of them.

Kumtraprasad Surjprasad was produced at Mazagaon Court today and Mr. R. S. Farikh, presidency magistrate, enlarged him on bail of Rs. 5,000.

Police Search For Missing Boy

BOMBAY, Saturday. The Kingsway police are making a city-wide search for a 14-year old boy, master A. K. Venkatramani, who disappeared under mysterious circumstances from school on Wednesday last.

The son of Mr. A. P. Krishnan, an employee of Firestone Tyre and Rubber Company, Venkatramani left for the South Indian School, Matunga, where he is studying in the tenth standard.

He was last seen playing in the school playground on Wednesday at noon, from where he disappeared.

Venkatramani is wheat-complexioned, four feet three inches in height, of medium build and sporting a short crop.

When last seen he was wearing a blue summer bush-shirt and khaki shorts.

Members of the public who come to know of his whereabouts are requested to communicate with the Kingsway police or with the boy's father.

THEFT CHARGE

BOMBAY, Saturday. Dining Cars' Abolition Resented

BOMBAY, Saturday. The Indian Merchants' Chamber and the Passenger and Traffic Relief Association have jointly protested to the Western Railway against their reported decision to discontinue dining cars on the Saurashtra Express, Flying Rance and other trains.

The Railway authorities are understood to have informed the Zonal Railway Committee of their intention to discontinue dining cars on these trains from October 1.

The Relief Association pointed out that the discontinuance of dining cars on these trains would remove one of the basic amenities of the travelling public and requested the railway authorities not to give effect to this measure.

The Indian Merchants' Chamber, the Silk Mills' Association and the Ahmedabad Yarnpi Mandai pointed out that passengers travelling on these trains between Bombay and Gujarat would be put to great inconvenience if the dining cars were abolished.

Police Catch Rail Ticket Racket Gang

BOMBAY, Saturday. A FAKE (Blank Paper) railway ticket gang with ramifications all over the country was arrested by the Dadar Railway police following the interrogation of a passenger by an Assistant Special Inspector (Tickets) Mr. Sharma, at the Dadar station yesterday.

Kashmir Flood Relief

BOMBAY, Saturday. A "Kashmir Flood Relief Committee" under the chairmanship of Mr. K. K. Shah, president of the B. F. C. C. was formed at a meeting of prominent citizens held at the Radio Club yesterday.

The Committee decided to organise a "Flood Relief Ball" at the National Sports Club of India on October 19, in aid of the flood-stricken people of Kashmir.

Producing the two accused before Chief Presidency Magistrate G. K. Rega at the Esplanade Court today, the police said that Mohammed Siddick got down at Dadar railway station by 2 Up Punjab Mail yesterday at 1 p.m.

WHEN QUESTIONED BY MR. SHARMA HE PRODUCED A BLANK PAPER MAIL TICKET FOR CLASS III ISSUED FROM SITAPUR TO PALGHAR. THE COST OF WHICH IS Rs. 55.

Siddick could not give satisfactory replies to Mr. Sharma's inquiries which aroused his suspicions.

Siddick is said to have admitted to him later that he had got the ticket from Ahmed Hassan by post from Kanpur for which he had sent Rs. 25 by money order.

GarbaTroupe Wins Prizes In Moscow

BOMBAY, Saturday. Recently back from its cultural tour of Russia and China, the Gurjar Garba Mandal held an informal social gathering at the Majestic Hotel this evening.

The Mandal had been the first Indian Cultural group to reach Moscow for the Sixth World Festival of Youths and Students.

The exceptional folk songs and dances rendered by the members of this group received much praise and admiration not only from the other delegates to the festival but also from the Soviet press.

The success of the group was highlighted by the prize-winning items "Garba" "Bajano" and Mayur (peacock) dance—which won the third prize in both the competitions against 1,100 and odd entries from each.

The Poona University has conferred M.Sc. (Agri) degree on Anant Ganesh Deokule, who had submitted a thesis.

CAUGHT IN THE ACT

BOMBAY, Saturday. A pickpocket who tried freely with a cinema crowd was caught immediately by a CID constable while he was snatching a Sheaffer's fountain pen from a person who was coming out of the picture house.

The incident took place near the Metro Cinema.

The owner of the fountain pen is requested to contact the Inspector of the Esplanade Police and prove his claim.

The Sheaffer's pen has a brown ebonite body and gold top.

The police stated that the plainclothesman lost sight of the man whose pen was picked.

Entertainment Duty Rules To Be Amended

BOMBAY, Saturday. The Government of Bombay proposes to amend the rules framed under the Central Provinces and Berar Entertainments Duty Act, 1936. A draft notification embodying the proposed amendments has been published in Part IV-B of the Bombay Government Gazette Extraordinary of September 19.

Objections and suggestions, if any, in respect of the proposed amendments which are scheduled to come into force from October next should reach the Secretary to Government, Revenue Department, Sachivalaya, Bombay-1, by September 26.

According to the proposed new rule 20 (A), a cinema film which has been awarded the President's Gold Medal or which the State Government, on a recommendation made by the Advisory Committee appointed for the purpose, considers as fulfilling an educational or social purpose of a high order will be exempted from payment of entertainments duty provided the proprietor undertakes to pay the person or persons, who, in the opinion of the Advisory Committee, are most responsible for the educational or social contribution of such film, an amount equivalent to the amount of entertainments duty payable on its exhibition.

Big Incentive To Work Of Panchayats

NEW DELHI, September 21. WHEN the Central Council of Local Self-Government meets in Srinagar on September 26 and 27, it will consider a uniform practice for Panchayats in all States to collect land revenue.

There is at present no uniformity in respect of the agency for the collection of land revenue in the different States.

The Government of India's view is that Panchayats should be made the agency for the collection of land revenue at an early date and that they should be allotted not less than 15 per cent of the collections as commission.

Apart from thus augmenting the finances of the Panchayats, it would act as an incentive to Panchayats to take greater interest in local self-government matters and would further help in the better collection of land revenue.

It is felt that this might also be an incentive for the development of the Panchayat system of Government in the country.—UPL

Tribunal's Jurisdiction Challenged

CALCUTTA, Sept. 21. JURISDICTION of the Tribunal constituted by the Government of India to decide whether the Bengal bank employees' dispute over the demand for compensatory allowance was covered by the All-India Bank Award was today challenged by the Bengal Bank Employees' Association.

Mr. Salim M. Merchant, who constitutes the one-man Tribunal, held preliminary hearing today. Representatives of the bankers as well as of the employees were present.

Mr. Prabhat Kar, M.P., and president of the Bank Employees' Association, raised an objection saying that this Tribunal had no jurisdiction to hear this reference in view of Section 33 of Industrial Disputes Act as amended in 1956. The Association, therefore, declined to participate even in the preliminary hearing.

The Tribunal ordered that the objection raised would be considered later and directed Mr. Kar to file his objection in writing. Mr. Merchant fixed October 16 next for hearing of the dispute.

Meanwhile, the bank employees' strike today continued for the fourth day disrupting all financial transactions.—UPL

Western Rail's 'Tallest' Consignment

NEW DELHI, Sept. 21. The "tallest" consignment ever moved on the Western Railway, and some of the tallest moved on the entire Indian railway system, were recently transported from Bombay to the Punjab for the Bhakra power project.

The consignment consisted of 56 sections of casings intended for the 150,000 H.P. Francis type turbines for the Bhakra power house.

The Railway had to move the giant consignments, some of them 14'3" tall, on special wagons.

Variety Show By Children

BOMBAY, Saturday. A suggestion to expand the scope of children's welfare activities to the districts level in the first instance, was made by Mr. N. K. Trivedi, Minister for Social Welfare, speaking as the chief guest at a children's variety entertainment programme at K. C. College here today.

The Minister gave the audience an idea of the work of the Government was doing in the field and said that the setting up of a department of social welfare was a great step forward in that direction. It would make possible the co-ordination of different welfare activities.

That, in turn, would find a solution to the manifold problems the institutions in this field were facing, he added.

Earlier, Mr. D. K. Khetani welcomed the Minister. Mrs. Jayawati A. Kaji proposed a vote of thanks.

USAF Drops VIP

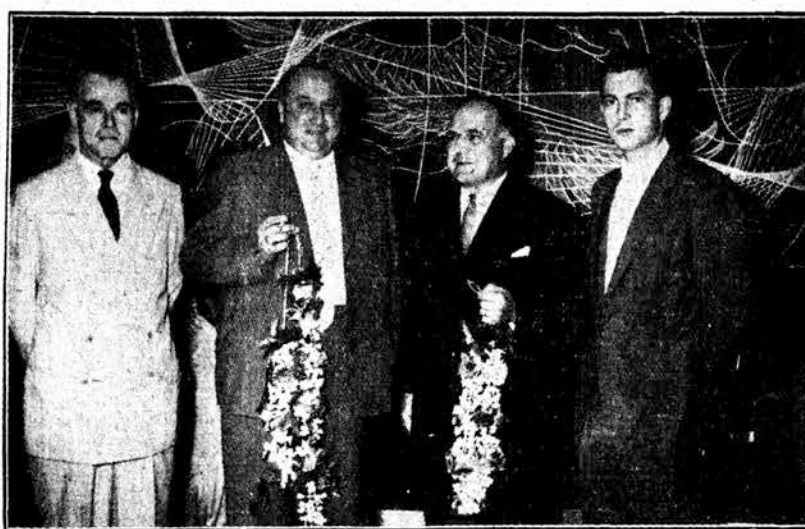

NEW DELHI, Sept. 21. Officials of the Finance Ministry in New Delhi are showing interest in a report from New York that the United States Air Force has decided to ban VIP (Very Important Person) from its economy drive.

The New York report said the term VIP would now be replaced by DV (distinguished visitor). The idea was to tighten up the use of plush accommodation and time-consuming ceremonies with which the U.S. Air Force bases had been flattered thousands of civilian and military visitors.

Henceforth, the report said, Defence Department and military visitors would be expected to decline offers of VIP (that is, DV), treatment.

However, this regulation might not produce immediate economies as a lot of VIP signs and licence plates would have to be repainted.—UPL

Kerala Will Not Encroach On Catholics' Rights

NEW DELHI, September 21. MR. JOSEPH MUNDASSERY, Education Minister of Kerala, said this morning that he did not apprehend any difficulty from the Central Government which would delay the enactment of the Kerala Education Bill into law.

He told a Press conference that the Kerala Government had accepted all suggestions of the Union Education, Law and Home Ministries which were even of an advisory character.

With regard to the clauses on compensation and the taking over of management of schools, all suggestions of the Central Government were incorporated in the Bill which had been approved subsequently by the State Assembly.

Mr. Mundassery claimed that in the final stage of discussion of the Bill in the Assembly, "there was not a whisper or obstruction" from the Opposition benches.

He denied a suggestion that the Kerala Education Bill would, in any manner, result in regimentation of education in the State.

Its aim was only to protect about one lakh teachers and employees of schools and give security and stability to their families which belonged to the lower middle class and poorer classes.

He gave the assurance that Government would not encroach on the religious and cultural rights and privileges of the Catholics or any other community.

He charged that a large number of managers of these schools were guilty of many malpractices—including acceptance of premium for appointment of teachers—as also periodic "tips"—sometimes six times in the year—and took advance receipts without making payment of salaries.

The Government wanted to give legal protection to the teachers for their emoluments and service conditions.—UPL

THE PRICE OF JOBS

NEW DELHI, Sept. 21. "Premium," "tip" and "share" in emoluments of teachers extorted by managers of private-owned schools as price for their jobs has been the order of the day in Kerala.

Kerala's Education Minister, Mr. Mundassery, explaining the "modus operandi" said here today, whenever a teacher was appointed, he would have to pay a "premium" or "purgess" which sometimes ranged up to Rs. 3,000.

Then, there were "tips"—up to six times a year and also a "share" in the monthly salary which teachers were obliged to pay to grease the palms of the managers and keep their jobs.

A teacher's job was considered attractive because it fetched about Rs. 80 in a State where educated unemployment was acute.—UPL

Charkha Seen As Wealth Symbol

RAJKOT, September 21. THE Union Minister for Communications, Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri said here today that the Charkha chosen by Gandhiji stood as a symbol for the economic prosperity of the country.

He was speaking at a function organised by the Rastriyashala here in connection with Gandhiji Jayanti celebration according to the Hindu calendar.

He said that Gandhiji believed that if the Charkha was used by every agriculturist of the country it could bring about a revolution in the village economy and help to a great extent to stabilise the economy of the whole country.

He also referred to Gandhiji's lifelong endeavour to attain Hindu-Muslim unity and the removal of untouchability.

President Rajendra Prasad, Mr. Dhebar, Mr. Morarji Desai, Mr. Sri Prakasa, Mr. Rashiklal Parikh and many others sent messages and self-spun yarn on the occasion.

Mr. Shastri left by car for Morvi, from where he will proceed to Kandla port.—UPL

Shastri Proud Of P & T Men

RAJKOT, Sept. 21. Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri yesterday referring to various demands put before him by local P and T employees said that in interim relief, economic betterment and service conditions were such things over which he could not take any decision as the Pay Commission had already started working on it.

"Of course I do admit that concentration of power and red tapism are so much prevalent that even small buildings cannot be built within reasonable time.

"I am trying to decentralise power so that work can be done urgently and efficiently," he said.

He added that he was proud that his department was very efficient and wanted to see that even in bad economic and working conditions efficiency was not marred.

He promised to look into the demands of the local P and T employees sympathetically.—UPL

Andhra Ordinance On Statistics Of Land Holdings

HYDERABAD, September 21. THE Governor of Andhra Pradesh, in an ordinance today called upon every landholder in the State, owning more than 20 acres of land, to furnish within 90 days of declaration of his holdings to the tahsildar within whose jurisdiction his holding or any part thereof is situated.

The ordinance provides for penalties for noncompliance or false declaration.

Explaining the need for the ordinance, Mr. Kala Venkata Rao, Revenue Minister, said that any progressive legislation must be based on precise knowledge.

It was necessary, therefore to know the division of land based on the extent owned by individuals.

He stated that the ordinance had nothing to do with eviction of tenants.

The Andhra Tenancy Act of 1956 afforded protection to the tenants from eviction for a period of three years.

It also had nothing to do with the fixation of ceiling on agricultural holdings.

"Of course," he said, "it is our idea to have ceilings, and legislation to that effect will have to be ready in three months' time."

If the work, he added, was completed by the end of December, it would give them a good clue regarding the level at which they could fix a basic holding, family holding and a ceiling.—UPL

Bonn Will Aid Our Small Industries

NEW DELHI, Sept. 21. The Indian official delegation, which visited West Germany, have finalised details of the proposed proto-type and training workshop for small-scale industries to be set up at Okhla, outside Delhi.

The West German Government has offered to spend Rs. fifty lakhs on the project in the form of plant and equipment for the workshop and the services of a number of German experts for a period of three years. Expenditure of about Rs. 47 lakhs will be met by the Government of India.

The workshop will train skilled personnel to make small-scale industries and make proto-types of machines required for these industries.

The delegation led by Dr. P. C. Alexander of the Ministry of Commerce and Industry, returned to New Delhi last night.—UPL

Central Sales Tax From Next Year

NEW DELHI, Sept. 21. The Government of India have decided further to postpone till January 1, 1958, the enforcement of section 15 of the Central Sales Tax Act, a Finance Ministry Press Note said here today.

The section seeks to restrict the powers of the State Governments to levy tax under State Laws on declared goods of special importance to inter-state trade or commerce.

The declared goods are cotton, cotton yarn, coal, hides and skins, iron and steel, jute and oil-seeds.

The present position of the States levying the taxes on their own will therefore continue till the end of this year.—UPL

Supreme Court Admits Khare's Petition

NAGPUR, Sept. 21. A petition filed by Dr. N. B. Khare, former president of the All-India Hindu Mahasabha, challenging the validity of the election of the Union President, Dr. Rajendra Prasad was admitted by the Supreme Court recently, according to reports received here.

Twice before the Supreme Court registrar had rejected the admission of this type of petition on some technical grounds.

Dr. Khare's petition, it is learnt, is based on article 71 (1) of the Constitution, which deals with the powers of the Supreme Court to go into the disputes and doubts regarding the election petition.—H.S.

SEVERE DROUGHT IN CHINA

PEKING, Sept. 21. SEVERE drought has affected the provinces of Anhwei, Hunan and Hupei, Peking radio reported last night.

In Anhwei, where no rain has fallen since mid-August, 500,000 acres of autumn crops were affected, the radio said.

It added that more than 2,000,000 members of farm co-operatives had been mobilized to lessen the effects of the calamity in Hunan, China's "rice bowl."—UPI-APP.

Saud To Visit Damascus

CAIRO, Sept. 21. The Saudi Arabian Ambassador to Egypt, Sheikh Ibrahim El Soliman, stated on Friday night that King Saud would visit Damascus next week to declare his "unconditional support for the Syrian Government" in the present situation.

The Ambassador told the Egyptian Middle East News Agency that he had received a cable from King Saud in which the King said that he would declare that "I myself, together with my government, army and people, are standing behind Syria and supporting her under all possible circumstances."—UPI-APP.

King Hussein On Red Threat

AMMAN, Sept. 21. Young King Hussein of Jordan, asked by journalists tonight whether he did not fear a Communist attack on his life, replied: "My life is in the hands of God."

He added: "It would not be the first time I have looked death in the face. Nothing will stop me carrying out my mission."

Referring to recent events in Syria, King Hussein said: "It is the present regime in Syria which is allowed to continue its work of subversion. It would endanger Syria's national existence and even the whole of the Arab world."

He continued: "Every responsible Arab nationalist must support the Syrian people in their struggle to restore Syrian nationalism and rid the country of all danger of foreign subversion."

Hussein added that he did not believe that the Syrian Arabs would ever renounce their nationalism in spite of pressure, or that they would ever become a Soviet satellite.—UPI-APP.

DEAD HEARTS REVIVED

LONDON, Sept. 21. Experiments in which dead human hearts were revived, then caused to stop and to recover again are described by a London doctor in the Lancet.

The hearts were obtained from four dead fetuses more than half-an-hour after being removed from the mothers' wombs.

The experimenter, Dr. Denis Melrose, describes how they were revived within 20 minutes by perfusion with Lockes solution—sodium chloride, calcium chloride, potassium chloride, sodium bicarbonate, dextrose and distilled water.

They were then stopped by perfusion with potassium citrate.

After being kept at a constant temperature for 15 minutes, they recovered after a coronal perfusion with Lockes solution.

Second Dole Of US Aid To Jordan

AMMAN, September 21. THE second consignment of American arms aid to Jordan will reach here next month, it was announced, yesterday.

United States spokesman said tanks and other heavy equipment would be among the shipment to arrive at Aqaba port.

The first batch of arms under America's 10,000,000 dollars military aid pact was delivered on Monday of last week in a dramatic demonstration flight.

The United States is also providing 10,000,000 dollars economic aid of which half has been paid and the balance is expected to be made over next month.

King Hussein, who met pressmen yesterday following his return from a holiday in Spain, referred to the Communist danger in Syria as a matter for "grief and concern."

THREAT: Developments in that brother Arab country he said, posed a threat to its nationalism and aimed at the destruction of Syria's Arab character.

But, he believed, that though Communism might gain a temporary hold, the Syrian people, the rest of the Arab world behind them, were sure to assert their nationalism.

Jordan fought Communism as it fought any foreign domination, the King said but indicated no change in Jordan's refusal to join the Baghdad Pact.—NAFEN.

US To Cut Down Army: WASHINGTON, Sept. 21. The United States Army will be cut down to 900,000 men by June, 1958.

This is the lowest figure since the early days of the Korean War.

America's armed forces are at present totalling 2,700,000 men to be slashed by a further 100,000 within the next 10 months.

A similar cut to be made by the end of this year was ordered in July.

Fifty per cent of the cuts are to be achieved at the expense of the Army.—NAFEN.

20 DIESEL LOCOS FOR INDIA: WEEHAWKEN, New Jersey, Sept. 21. Indian diplomatic and railway officials are expected to be on a special loading ceremony marking the shipment of 20 mainline diesel electric locomotives to India.

The cargo aboard the s.s. Belkarin will be the largest shipment of diesel locomotives ever to leave the port of New York.

The 20 locomotives are the first of 100 ALCO "world" diesel-electrics ordered by the Indian Government from the American firm, ALCO products, incorporated—one of the pioneers in locomotive manufacturing.

The remainder of the shipment of the broad-gauged streamlined locomotives is expected to be delivered in the second half of 1958.—USIS.

Composer Sibelius Passes Away: HELSINKI, Sept. 21. The world famous Finnish composer, Sibelius died of a cerebral hemorrhage at his home on the outskirts of Helsinki. He was 91.

Sibelius' sudden death came as a complete surprise. He was feeling well yesterday morning, but he passed away at 21-15 hours (local time), eight hours after having a stroke.

At the precise moment of his death, the Symphony Orchestra of Helsinki, under the baton of British conductor, Sir Malcolm Sargent, was playing his Fifth Symphony.

The Finnish Radio interrupted its programmes to announce Sibelius' death and immediately substituted works of the master for the scheduled programme.—UPI-APP.

Menzies Amends His Words: CANBERRA, Sept. 21. Australian Prime Minister Robert Menzies said today that Australian forces could still be armed with atomic weapons.

Mr. Menzies said his defence statement to Parliament yesterday was not intended to exclude this possibility.

Mr. Menzies said he had intended to convey only that the manufacture of nuclear weapons would not be undertaken by Australia and should be confined, if possible, to the three great Powers.—UPI-APP.

Education Ministers Favour 3-Year Degree Course

NEW DELHI, September 21. THE introduction of three-year degree course in all the universities at an early date, increase in the number of trained teachers for technical education, expansion of educational facilities for girl students and linguistic minorities and provision of quality books at a cheap cost were some of the important recommendations made by the State Education Ministers' Conference which concluded here this afternoon.

The Conference, presided over by the Union Education Minister Maulana Azad, was of the firm opinion that implementation of the Deshmukh Committee scheme for the introduction of three-year degree course in place of the present two-year course was highly essential for the improvement of university education.

It said that speedy steps should be taken to introduce this scheme. In this connection the conference expressed the hope that funds provided for the university education in the Second Plan, supplemented by the allocation made by the University Grants Commission, and the State Governments would be made available for the introduction of this important reform.

All the State Ministers agreed to examine their budgetary position with the object of finding out how funds could be made available by suitable adjustments in the various educational plans.

Maulana Azad in his inaugural address to the conference yesterday had strongly commended the proposal for a three-year degree course and promised Centre's help in its implementation.

FREE AND COMPULSORY

The Conference endorsed the recommendation made by Education Panel of the Planning Commission that education for the age group of six to eleven should be made free, universal and compulsory by the end of the Third Plan period and for this purpose various suitable measures, including increase in pupil-teacher ratio, should be devised.

It also agreed to examine the note on perspective planning prepared by the Madras Government in this connection.

Another important recommendation of the Conference was that the pattern of educational reconstruction that had been formulated from the elementary to the university stage should be implemented vigorously within the funds that had been allocated.

West Irian Goes On Agenda Of UN Assembly

UNITED NATIONS, New York, September 21. THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY APPROVED ON FRIDAY THE RECOMMENDATION OF THE STEERING COMMITTEE TO INCLUDE THE QUESTION OF WEST IRIAN ON THE AGENDA OF THE PRESENT SESSION.

The vote was 49 against 21, with 11 abstentions.

Before the vote, the Foreign Minister of the Netherlands, Mr. J. M. Luns, expressed "serious regret and grave misgivings" over the General Committee's recommendation.

Indonesia, he noted, maintained that "Netherlands New Guinea" was legally already a part of Indonesia and claimed "unconditional surrender" by the Netherlands to Indonesia of the territory administered by the Netherlands under Chapter XI of the Charter.

This claim, he stated, was "based on a blatantly erroneous interpretation" of the 1949 round table agreement, an agreement which Indonesia had unilaterally abrogated in 1956, thus losing the right to adhere, it in support of its "pretension".

The only UN organ competent to take cognizance of the case was the International Court of Justice, and this procedure was rejected by Indonesia, he said.

DUTCH PROTEST

The Dutch representative expressed "astonishment" that the Indonesian representative, who had a few days ago extolled the principle of self-determination, should now ask the General Assembly "to abet" it in depriving "the population of Netherlands New Guinea" of this exercise of self-determination, which the Netherlands had "solemnly promised to grant to it as soon as that population was able to express its will."

As the Netherlands could, "under no circumstances," agree to break this solemn promise, discussion by the Assembly, negotiation or pressure from a Good Offices Committee, could not possibly lead to any result other than "a further deterioration of the relations between the Netherlands and Indonesia," he declared.

Mr. Ali Sastroamidjojo (Indonesia) noted that 21 member states had asked for inclusion of this item, and the general Committee had approved it.

The United Nations was to be "a centre for harmonising the actions of nations," he said, adding his delegation regretted the attitude taken by the representative of the Netherlands.

CASEY'S PLEA

Mr. Casey (Australia) said his delegation regretted to oppose once again the inclusion of this item, and recalled that this was the only matter in dispute between Australia and Indonesia.

It would be in the best interest of international peace and co-operation not to discuss this matter now and to provide a "cooling-off period," Mr. Casey concluded.—UPI-AFP.

Federal Court's Order On Arkansas Governor

LITTLE ROCK, Arkansas, September 21. FEDERAL JUDGE RONALD DAVIES ISSUED AN INJUNCTION ON ARKANSAS GOVERNOR FAUBUS TO END RACIAL DISCRIMINATION MEASURES.

The judge said it was clear from the testimony and evidence presented that the racial integration plan for Central High School was thwarted by Faubus' use of the Arkansas National Guard.

Judge Davies noted that the racial integration plan adopted by the school board had been approved by his own court and by a U.S. Court of Appeals.

The judge said the implementation of the integration plan would have involved no risk of violence and that in fact no violence had occurred so far.

Faubus had contended that he called out the National Guard to prevent possible violence.

The injunction would be applicable immediately to Governor Faubus, and General King, who commands the Guard detachment, stationed in front of the Central High School.

The judge said the injunction would order Faubus and the other officials to cease using the Guard for the purpose of preventing Negro pupils from attending the high school.

The injunction would also prohibit State officials from opposing in any other manner the orders of Judge Davies concerning the racial integration plan.

JURISDICTION

Lawyers for Governor Faubus told a Federal Court yesterday, it had no jurisdiction in injunction proceedings against the Governor and then walked out of court.

Federal Judge Davies opened the hearings on a United States Government petition for an injunction to prevent Faubus from interfering with racial integration.

At the opening of the session Faubus' attorneys told Judge Davies that he was not competent to hear the case because of his alleged prejudice against Faubus.

The lawyers also petitioned the court to reject the Federal Government injunction request.

Davies turned down both motions.

MENON RAPS U.K. STAND ON S. AFRICA

U. N. NEW YORK, September 21. MR. V. K. KRISHNA MENON SAID YESTERDAY ON "THE TREATMENT OF PEOPLE OF INDIAN ORIGIN IN SOUTH AFRICA" THAT THIS ITEM WAS BEING INSCRIBED IN PURSUANCE OF A U. N. DECISION WHICH REQUESTED BOTH PARTIES TO REPORT "ON WHAT HAS HAPPENED SINCE THE LAST SESSION."

Since 1948, the vote in favour of this item had been increasing to the point where last year only one vote was cast against it.

Unfortunately, this was "the important vote—the vote of South Africa," he said, "the vote which we want to get, and we will get some day," he asserted.

The argument of the United Kingdom representative that this matter had been dealt with for ten years without success and should, therefore, not be inscribed in the agenda, was not valid, he stated.

What about the application of this argument to the case of disarmament?

For India, this question was "a matter of international obligations," said Mr. Menon.

As to the United Kingdom representative, "doubts regarding the legality of placing this matter on the agenda, he would say that 'Her Majesty's Government has doubts as to the legality of such questions'."

The United Kingdom Government had "a very serious responsibility in this matter," he went on.

If the United Kingdom would "abstain quietly from this debate, then we would say nothing, but when it abstains publicly, we have to enter our protest."

Neither Pakistan nor India had ever introduced in the General Assembly a resolution to condemn South Africa, he said.

All they had called for in this case was observance of international obligations and of the Charter.

CONDITIONS

"Things have become much worse" with respect to the problem of Indians in South Africa.

The indigenous Africans were being "pushed out of the slums" so that people of Indian origin could be housed there.

It did not have representation in South Africa "because we do not want our people to be insulted there."

These people had "helped to build up the country."

When the British Government brought these people to South Africa much against their will and against public opinion, they were promised treatment as human beings.

Troops Withdrawn

LITTLE ROCK, Arkansas, Sept. 21. The Arkansas National Guard troops stationed around Little Rock's central high school to prevent Negro children from entering were withdrawn on Friday night.

Arkansas Governor Orval Faubus who had ordered out the armed troops to block the entrance to the school to Negro children, spoke over television.

He said that he would use all possible measures to appeal to the Federal Court against the injunction.

NORWAY'S KING HAAKON DIES

OSLO, September 21. KING HAAKON VII of Norway died today. He was 85, taking the name of Olav V.

The new king will have to swear an oath before Parliament, but there will be no coronation.

Following the coronation of King Haakon VII in 1906, the Norwegian constitution was changed and the paragraph concerning the coronation was abolished.

A Danish prince by origin, King Haakon reigned over Norway for 52 years. His father was King Frederick VIII of Denmark and his mother was the daughter of King Carl XV of Sweden.

He married Princess Maud of England.

After the dissolution of the union between Norway and Sweden, the Norwegian Storting (Parliament) offered the crown to the royal prince.

He demanded that a plebiscite should be held before he would accept the crown.

He made his solemn entry into Oslo on November 25, 1905, and was crowned in Trondheim cathedral on June 22, 1906.

NAZI EPISODE

In the spring of 1940, Hitler sent an ultimatum to King Haakon.

The King rejected it on April 10 and Hitler went to war. The King also refused to hand over the reins of the Government to the Nazi collaborator, Vidkun Quisling.

Unable to resist the overwhelming German forces, King Haakon left Norway on June 10, 1940, to continue the fight from London, where a Norwegian government-in-exile was set up.

After the liberation, the Norwegian people held a national subscription and presented the King a yacht to express their recognition on November 25, 1955.

Celebrations were held throughout Norway to mark the 50th anniversary of the country's independence and 50 years of King Haakon's reign.

In July, 1956, the King had a fall in his summer residence near Oslo and broke his leg.

He never really regained complete health afterwards.

The King lived a simple, almost austere life, especially after the death of Queen Maud in 1938.

U.N. MISSION URGED TO AID TANGANYIKA

MOMBASA, September 21. AN appeal to the United Nations Visiting Mission to give practical help "in this critical hour" in the history of Tanganyika has been made by the United Tanganyika Party in a memorandum presented to the mission at Dar es Salaam.

The United Nations Visiting Mission is investigating the progress which the Trust Territory of Tanganyika has made under British administration.

The United Tanganyika Party memorandum states that it is the only organisation in Tanganyika which represents "agreed opinion" among all races.

"The United Tanganyika Party has the greatest faith in the future of the Territory and desires self-Government at the earliest practicable moment," the memorandum states.

It nevertheless warns that the Party has been "deeply and gravely disturbed" by the "damaging effect" which racial policies have had on the Territory over the last few years.

The Party called upon the United Nations Mission to ask the Government of Tanganyika for a full economic statement, showing: the amount of investment in Tanganyika year by year over the last five years; the amount of capital and profits withdrawn from the country over a similar period; the amount of money required to effectively develop the country and meet the demands of its people for an improved standard of living; for better educational facilities and for better social services; and, to ask what resources the Tanganyika Government has to meet such claims.

The mission has also been urged, to recommend to the World Bank to prepare a report on the economic requirements of the Territory and methods of raising finance.—NAFEN.

10,000 Miles To Wedlock

GLASGOW, Sept. 21. KAVONNA DEE, 23-year-old secretary from Newcastle, New South Wales, has just arrived in this country to marry a Scotsman she has never seen.

Her 10,000-mile journey was undertaken purely on the strength of letters which she and her groom-to-be have been exchanging.

Kavonna, feeling lonely, wrote to an Australian church newspaper asking for pen friends.

When the letters began coming in the ones which really attracted her were from the Rev. John Johnson, 33-year-old Church of Scotland priest who works in the remote village of Ollaberry, in the Shetland Islands.

The two exchanged more and more secrets until last November, Rev. Johnson wrote asking Kavonna to marry him.

They will be married in Edinburgh and then make their home in Ollaberry, where Rev. Johnson has been working for four years.—NAFEN.

Jordan King Raises Hornet's Nest

Chronicle Correspondent P. T. Chandra

LONDON, Sept. 21. Former Syrian dictator General Shishakly has set up a "Free Syrian Government" in Turkey.

He is supported by Emir Atrash, leader of the Druze tribe and other exiles.

The object of the new Government is to bring about the fall of the present Syrian administration.

King Hussein of Jordan called on the Syrian people to throw out the Syrian leaders whom he described as "anti-nationalist opportunists."

Hussein's open intervention in Syria's internal politics is likely to provoke strong protest from Syria.

It will also have repercussions in the Arab world.

Elements in Jordan who are hostile to Hussein are likely to make the throne too hot for him.

Jordan is still under martial law and its Parliament is suspended.

All Over A Rusty Anchor

SINGAPORE, Sept. 21. The 5,000-ton Philippine-owned freighter "Sula" was delayed several hours here today when its crew of 49 threatened to mutiny over salvage rights on a rusty anchor.

The "Sula," a Panamanian-flag vessel, was weighing anchor when the crew noticed the rusty anchor clinging to that of the ships.

The crew raised it with the idea of selling it for scrap and sharing the money, but it was later found the anchor belonged to the Master Attendant, Singapore Harbour Department.

The crew refused to give up the anchor despite orders from the ship's captain. Harbor police were called abroad to persuade them to return it to the Master Attendant.—UPI-AFP.

PROJECTS LAUNCHED
LIKELY TO NEED A GOOD DEAL OF TIME AND AT-TENTION ON THURSDAY AND FRIDAY.
PERSEVERANCE SHOULD BRING IMMEDIATE RE-WARDS.
IT COULD BE A VERY EVENTFUL AND IMPORTANT
WEEK IF YOU WERE BORN SOMETIME IN SEPTEMBER, OCTOBER OR NOVEMBER OF ANY YEAR.

CAPRICORN
DEC. 21-JAN. 19

Early in the week good news inspires you to increased effort and ensures good material reward.

Later there will be dispute with someone close to you and the upset will cause anxiety.
One domestic problem is still unsolved and you will have to face it for some months.
Socially and in personal life a time of happiness and new interests.

AQUARIUS
JAN. 20-FEB. 18

Prepare to mark time for a few weeks longer.
Certain important schemes are now under way but not quite mature.

Meanwhile you get the first instalment of money due to you over the next few months.
An unexpected change in your week-end plans will be pleasant and help you to cement an old friendship.

PISCES

FEB. 19-MARCH 20

With better concentration you will show more initiative in matters that have run into a rut.

This will be especially noticeable at work, where your handling of a task will bring praise and handsome rewards.
Money will come in easily and there may be an unexpected stroke of good luck around Thursday.

ARIES

MARCH 21-APRIL 20

The influence of older friends will dominate your plans and help you to temper your restlessness.

By concentrating on one thing at a time you will get better results with less effort.
Socially, mid-week is interesting and you may pick up some unexpected gains in speculation.

TAURUS

APRIL 21-MAY 20

Wednesday and Thursday are likely to be the most important days of the week.

Changes or new influences will be very marked at this time and may ease your pocket as well as business problems.

The right 'hunches' will enable you to get out of a personal difficulty and also to make money.

A good time for marriage, domestic changes and contacting new friends.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

Much preliminary scheming this week before you clinch a satisfactory new agreement.

Up and down finances will have you confused but only temporarily.
A major success in the offing will benefit your pocket, book and your working position.

Unexpected journeying will bring happiness during weekend.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 20

You will have good fortune in all professional undertakings and reap considerable profits as well.

A social function will broaden your outlook and engage you in a new spare-time activity.

Co-operation with a neighfriends will be a welcome refreshment during week-end.

Offer of a position of more trust will come your way and you will find yourself stepping forward more quickly than anticipated.

There will be a mid-week opportunity for putting your money to good use, investing in profitable projects.

An entertainment plan with a new slant may give lots of pleasure to a teen-ager and you will welcome appreciation of this from someone you regard

NEW YORK EXPERT'S TIP TO MAKE BUSES PAY

HOW the city-owned bus lines throughout the nation might get out of the red and start operating at a profit was suggested here by a New York city transit authority official.

Col. James B. Edmunds, chief of Surface Operations, speaks with authority.

For the first time since the 'forties, New York's bus system has operated in the black, even if this fiscal year profit has been only $6,904.69.

A year before there was a deficit of over $4,000,000, and a year previous to that a deficit of well over $5,000,000.

The surplus was earned despite a $160,975 drop in fares.

"I don't want to tell other cities how to run their business but I can relate what has been accomplished here in New York by facing some hard facts of bus operation and thereby securing the necessary economies."

New Schedule

Col. Edmunds said his first step was to institute bus schedule changes for greater efficiency.

His second was the establishment of a central shop for heavy repairs, thus cutting down on labour and material costs.

The third provided schooling in labour relations and maintenance techniques.

HIS POLICY HAS BEEN TO CURTAIL SERVICE DURING THE "DEAD" NIGHT HOURS AND OTHER OFF-PEAK PE-RIODS TO PROVIDE BETTER

SERVICE WHEN BUSES WERE MOST NEEDED.

That not only cut down labour and maintenance costs, but secured more riders during the rush hours.

No bus lines, however, were eliminated, even during the "dead" hours.

Repair work was centralised in a single shop in east New York.

The colonel said that when he took over his duties three years ago, after a career in Army Transportation, there were four widely scattered shops resulting in considerable labour and maintenance waste.

"Because of increased productivity of maintenance employees working and supervised under one roof," he said, "the life of our diesel engines has been doubled and that of the automatic bus transmissions tripled and fuel bills dropped."

The labour force on the surface lines has also been reduced from 9,000 to 7,500 in two years without layoffs through a policy of not replacing employees who have retired or quit, the colonel said.

Training

He added that an efficiency educational programme has been undertaken for the benefit of supervisors and maintenance personnel.

During the past year about 440 such employees were sent to overtime rates to classes conducted by the Cornell School of Labour Extension and to courses taught by bus manufacturers' specialists to learn labour relations and advanced maintenance techniques.

"Even the men on top have been made budget-conscious by receiving instructions in accounting controls from myself and from James A. Dearie, our budget director," Col.
Edmunds said.

"Another savings factor has been the standardisation of procedures at all 11 bus operating locations, and some labour operations resulting from that have been cut 50 per cent."

Wage Scale

Col. Edmunds pointed out that none of the brunt of the savings has been borne by labour itself.

"We generally lead the industry in wages," he said, noting that the current hourly scale for maintenance men and operators is $2.31, with a new contract coming up in the fall.

"Though by comparison the hourly rate in Chicago is $2.42 that city has a higher bus fare than here — 25 cents."

Our policy is to keep fares at the 15-cent level," the operations chief said. "And to stay in the black from now on."

Bright Kids Have The Day

ANN ARBOR, MICH.

LEADING educators are indicating that it's the bright child—rather than the slow student—who will receive the lion's share of attention this year.

In "a talent hunt for 2 per cent of this nation's children," the educationists tell parents what to look for in the preschool child.

"Bright children, in general, get on people's nerves," warns the University of Michigan's specialist in gifted youngsters,
Dr. Warren Ketcham of the School of Education.

He contends that many bright children are overlooked
"because people don't realise they're bright."

Dr. Ketcham says that studies at the University's Training School show that the brightest youngsters "learn things so quickly that they are frequently accused of not having a long attention span; they do too many things at once; they flit about and adults think they don't finish the things they do and that they never will learn anything well because they don't practise it."

"In most instances, upon close examination, you'll find that they have learned it a long time ago. No one knows how, and it is one of the mysteries of education," Dr. Ketcham added.

NEW PLANS TO FIGHT JUVENILE CRIME

WASHINGTON.

A coast-to-coast survey of juvenile delinquency has turned up new methods being mixed with old ideas to combat the rise in youthful crime.

Updated plans include junior traffic police and bicycle courts, police courses in school and a "Youth Anonymous" Club.

The Club, patterned after Alcoholics Anonymous would help delinquents help themselves become law-abiding citizens with the assistance of former delinquents.

The survey, by the American Municipal Association, downgraded the value of recreational facilities in curbing delinquency.

Some cities which considered their playtime facilities lacking often reported low juvenile offender rates, while other communities pleased with their playgrounds had high rates.

Value of a curfew on youngsters also received low ratings

Growing

"Two-thirds of the country's big cities reported higher delinquency rates.
Most reported they were expanding programmes to fight the problem.

The most commonly followed practices are the oldest one — censoring books and entertainment deemed lewd or inciting to crime.

Curfews were reported in growing use.
Troublesome sign of a growing problem is that even small communities have begun to organise special juvenile bureaus within their police departments.

Others have united public and private groups to combat the youthful crime.

More and more cities are attempting to identify potential delinquents before they get into trouble.

These youths are then referred to guidance clinics.
Some areas, where delinquents' families do not respond to guidance, have case workers visit the parents again and again to demonstrate what assistance is available.

Two Views

In New York rookie policemen have been assigned to help crack down on juvenile crime.

Some city officials told the association that tougher laws and law enforcement were the answer. Others say delinquency is like a sickness and requires treatment.

However, cities complain of severe shortages of trained social and psychiatric workers that delay programmes of guidance, probation and parole.

Some cities said parent liability laws — under which parents are held financially responsible for damages caused by their children — have met with success.

The Stars All Have Their Own Pet Hoodoo-Busters

JIMMY STEWART'S CAR PUTT-PUTT TO A STOP. HE WAS OUT OF GASOLINE. THE VERY DAY THAT HE LEARNED OF HIS FAILURE TO MAKE THE BRIGADIER GENERAL GRADE IN THE AIR CORPS.

"Something sad always happens to me when I run out of gas," said Stewart who is normally without superstition, except for this far-fetched belief.

Most of the stars have one fear or another, sometimes several. You can be sure that Hollywood is a careful city last Friday—the 13th.

They don't come any more superstitious than Kim Novak. She almost married Mario Bandini in Rome last July because her horoscope predicted a fast wedding.

Not only is purple Kim's favorite color, but she believes it brings her luck. And she always wears something lavender, even if it is only a ribbon on her petticoat.

She believes that bad luck will follow if a bird flies into her room. A big black rook flew into her open window during the Cannes Film Festival and it was hours before the terrified film star left the room. That same night she met Bandini. You figure this one!

John Wayne has a lucky gun. He used it first in his first big western, "Stagecoach." He has used it in every western since. When his son Pat was starred in "The Young Land," he was loaned his pop's lucky six-shooter.

Astology isn't as all-popular as it was a few years ago, but you can't get Marlene Dietrich to sign any important document without first consulting her star-gazer, Carroll Righter.

Arlene Dahl is another faithful follower of the charts. So is Linda Christian.

But something went wrong when Linda's pet astrologer gave her the date and place for her marriage to Tyrone Power. Linda's restlessness? Even a star-gazer cannot control that.

Her Grace Kelly is a Scorpio—November 12th. Her chart-maker has told her she should only make friends with people born under the sign of Leo—late July and early August.

This doesn't include a husband—which is lucky, because Prince Rainier was born May 31st—under the sign of Gemini.

Virgos are taboo for Grace and when writer Cleveland Amory said that he was born in early September, she screamed. "Oh, no, I was warned to be careful of Virgos."

Shelley Winters believes that nothing can harm her if she first knocks on wood, twice. She taps before every scene and before boarding a plane. Shelley always wears the same black and white check blouse for flying. The skirt varies but never the blouse.

JIMMY DURANTE CALLS THEM "SUPERSTITIOUS." AND HE'S PROBABLY RIGHT. JIMMY NEVER WALKS UNDER LADDERS AND IF A BLACK CAT WALKS IN FRONT OF HIM, HE'S A NERVOUS WRECK FOR THE REST OF THE DAY.

For years Marilyn Monroe considered a red dress her good luck charm. She wore it first when she accepted her first award. You may remember the garment. Very low and very tight. She threatened at the time to keep it forever.

Zsa Zsa, Eva and Magda Gabor spend so much time knocking on wood that they don't have too much time to knock each other. Janet Leigh is almost afraid to say "Good Morning" without first rapping her knuckles on a piece of wood. Janet is also afraid of anything that crawls, believing even the smallest bug across her path to be unlucky.

How you dress is one of the major superstitions among show folk. Henry Fonda always puts his right shoe on first. And takes his left shoe off first.

Gene Tierney dresses from the feet up, believing a catastrophe will occur otherwise. Carol Haney won't rehearse without the old pair of dancing pumps with which she started her dancing career. Shirley MacLaine wears the same flat black pumps to and from the studio.

And you have all seen Van Johnson's lucky red sock. Glenn Ford sews his lucky red tie into the lining of his suits. And Jane Wyman has her 22-year-old good luck charm—a Santa Claus bootie.

Quite a few of the directors put themselves in their pictures for good luck—you can always spot Alfred Hitchcock in his thriller-drillers.

Tony Martin believes the number 15 is lucky for him. And Mervyn LeRoy always uses the number 62 in his pictures.

Alan Ladd who has now settled down into steady matrimony again, refuses to take off his wedding ring while film-making.

Linda Darnell plays Lady tied down into steady matrimony under ladders and whistling in dressing rooms. Tyrone Power is another dressing room whistler, but for counter-action, collects giant rabbits' feet.

Natalie Wood won't budge without one of her toy tiger collection. And Jane Withers is always accompanied by a pink elephant. A stuffed owl, a cat and Kewpie doll.

Fred Astaire's good luck charm is a beat up terry cloth bathrobe—he wore it first in "The Gay Divorcee."

Anne Baxter prays for rain when she starts a play or picture. It rained the first day of "The Razor's Edge" which won her an Oscar.

Bogged Down

TONGUES were wagging in wonderment at this odd bid of casting—said to be the most unusual of all time: Robert Mitchum's 18-year-old son, Jim, is to play his father's brother in Bob's first independent movie, "Thunder Road," slated to start next month. It's the boy's first screen appearance, too.

Mitchum, incidentally, has been having nothing but carloads of trouble trying to get this movie on the road. Inexperienced as he is along production lines, Mitchum felt he could handle just about every detail, including story, sets and casting. Even while starring in "The Enemy Below" at 20th Century Fox, he was spending much of his time in his dressing room interviewing acting candidates.

Last week Mitchum was still at a loss for a feminine lead and there were hints of a postponement.

Queen of the pin-up parade, Jayne Mansfield is all set to get 'em whistling in the coming "Ah! For A Man!"

Carl Foreman—Stars Are Once More In The Ascendant

CARL FOREMAN—"THE ONLY AMERICAN IN LONDON WITHOUT CAR AND CHAUFFEUR"—IS THE ONLY MAN TO HAVE HAD TWO STARS OF THE CALIBRE OF INGRID BERGMAN AND SOPHIA LOREN FIGHTING TO WORK IN HIS PICTURE, "STELLA."

If Sophia had been unavailable, Ingrid was standing by to take over.

Foreman first came to Hollywood in 1934, and is the man who made a star of Kirk Douglas in "Champion," wrote Marlon Brando's first film, "The Men," and co-produced and wrote "High Noon," which won Gary Cooper his first Oscar.

For the past several years, the name of Carl Foreman has only been whispered in Hollywood. He was one of the group investigated by the House Un-American Activities Committee.

He left Hollywood to work abroad. Recently, there was a news item that Foreman was in Washington, that he had spoken his piece before a committee and admitted political activities during his early manhood, but that everything to do with communism had been abhorrent to him for many, many years.

Soon after, he was back in London to start his own company, Highroad Productions, with an ambitious film schedule and top stars.

"I went to Washington of my own free will," says Foreman. "No one asked me to come. I told my story, and I was given a clean bill of political health. You don't know what it means to be out from under that cloud. Now I can work again and, I hope, well."

"After 'Stella,' which is a sort of 'High Noon' based on fear, I plan 'The Holiday,' which could be made in Europe or in Hollywood. It's a sophisticated horror story with H. G. Clouzot directing.

"And I want someone like Ava Gardner. If she does it, I will make it in Italy or Spain. After that, I'll make 'The Guns of Navarone' with William Holden or Gary Cooper. My original plan was to produce four pictures over three years. Now I will make seven."

When Foreman came to Hollywood 23 years ago he almost starved. "I lost 28 pounds before I landed my first job. For eight days I carried a spear in the Hollywood Bowl production of Max Reinhardt's 'Midsummer Night's Dream,' with Olivia de Havilland and Mickey Rooney.

"But I always preferred to write rather than act." His partnership with Stanley Kramer, whereby he did the writing and Kramer the producing, earned them both a fortune.

About Marlon Brando and why he is difficult with the press, Foreman says: "No one knows how to handle him. When I first met him before we started 'The Men,' he was so shy, so scared, and he was just awful at rehearsals.

"Some actors are. They only come to life when the camera turns. Marlon is afraid of people. He only lets down when he accepts you as a friend."

"Stella" is a World War II story. Bill Holden plays the Captain of a rescue tug and Sophia a girl who was to have married one of the men who died. She goes with the apart-

Boris Back On Easy Street

AT least three movie companies have a "Boris Morros, Counter-Spy," film title on file.

With all the fabulous offers now rolling in—films, TV, articles—the roly-poly spy-producer will be able to pay the bills, especially for the airplane travel that reached nightmare proportions during the past few years.

He'll be coming back to Hollywood where life is not quite so dangerous—outside of "Confidential," of course!

Canny Character

THE Burt Lancaster "Ben Hur" assignment for Metro is shaky because he wouldn't sign to release his company's pictures with Leo the Lion.

Grable Goes Great With The Gee-gees

THE two married entertainment combines of Desi Arnaz and Lucille Ball and Harry James and Betty Grable never miss the late summer Del Mar race meet, or at least they haven't in the past ten seasons of thoroughbred racing.

Both couples own stables, the James-Grable menage quite the largest (and winningest) with about 20 head. Their "take" also has been much better.

Whereas track reports are that Desi and Lucy have done practically nothing in the horse competition department and have dropped heavy sums in their waging fortune's wheel has been spinning briskly on both ends for Harry and Betty.

Their two-year-old "No Bumps," named after Betty's suspension-taking refusal to do burlesque grinds in one of her dancing movies, won a $25,000 stakes race a few days ago while lesser out-burners have been collecting consistently in the win-place-show divisions.

Not content with six days of racing a week at Del Mar, Betty crosses the border to take a Sunday whirl at the assorted wagering offered on a 12-race card at Caliente.

She is no slouch as a handicapper, either, poring over sheets with a mathematical and engineering mind.

She carries to the track an outfit resembling a miniature adding machine and with it tabulates her one-two-three choices in each race. Acquaintances bound her for the selections.

On a recent Sunday at Caliente, Betty picked four of five winners in the featured 5-10 contest for a consolation reward of $750, plus two quintas for $300 and—get this—a 12-horse show parlay that netted $1,400.

One of the most superstitious stars in Hollywood, Betty can be easily spotted in the Turf Club because at the track she never wears anything but her stable colours.

She's sold on other omens, too. "My horses always run faster and win more purses when I'm out of work," she often declares—and turf records, including this summer's windfall at Del Mar, seem to bear this out.

...There Is A Tide In The Affairs Of Men

NOW swinging into a complete type-reversal by enlisting as a ferocious villain in U.I.'s "Once Upon A Horse," one-time cowboy-hero star Bob Steele reveals an interesting sidelight on "what might have been"—had he not missed the Television boat by a good pier's length a dozen years ago.

Bob said his lack of TV vision was brought sharply to mind by the recent death of Oliver Hardy, whose comedies with partner Stan Laurel reaped the highest returns of any pictures revived in the medium.

"Back in the early 'forties," he explained, "I was offered the right to buy a number of my old Western features from the Bell Company. For just 20 dollars each I could have picked up the lot—close to a hundred of them."

"But," he added with a primace of disgust, "I turned down the chance. For an investment of 1,000 dollars, I could have been lying on top of the world today!"

It wasn't lack of backing, he admitted that caused him to refuse the deal—simply lack of foresight. What, he asked himself, would he do with the films once he bought them?

They were outdated, shorter than the movie features of today—so where could he peddle them?

"Television was then something everybody joked about," said Bob. "Actually it was already with us but nobody took it at all seriously—nobody that is except another cowboy of my

EVEN COLOSSI QUAKE WITH STAGE FRIGHT

THE TERRIFYING IDEA OF FACING A MOVIE CAMERA, OF SPEAKING INTO THE MIKE, EVEN BEING CALLED TO STAND UP NEXT TO THE TOASTMASTER—IT KNOCKS OVER THE BIGGEST OF 'EM.

Today's example is the world's strongest man—a fellow so powerful he can hoist a full grown horse without straining a bicep.

Nevertheless, 340-pound Paul Anderson, winner of the Olympic Games weight-lifting crown, has been perspiring under his size-24 collar for the past two weeks.

All because, for the first time in his career, he's going to face a motion picture camera—and in CinemaScope!

It's for his role with the comedy team of Roman and Martin, and pretty Martha Hyer, in U.I.'s "Once Upon A Horse."

"I guess I'm just nervous," Paul said. He paused to flex the muscles which have enabled him to lift weights totalling more than a ton and a half.

"All my muscle-training has been to push around railroad cars and things like that. Now I've got to use them to emote with. I'm ashamed of my fears, but that's the way I'm tackling this job."

Hal Kanter had his professional edge on the 24-year-old Behemoth ever since he happened to catch a newsreel showing Anderson besting Russia's mightiest men in a Moscow meet.

Not until he began preparations for "Once Upon A Horse" did Kanter get a chance to do something about getting Anderson to appear in one of his productions.

He wrote in a part calling for a village blacksmith—the strongest smithy in the West. One sequence calls for the man-mountain to lift an 800-pound steer on his shoulders and carry him around for a spell. This doesn't worry the Toccoa, Georgia boy a tiny bit.

In another scene Kanter has him serving as a human dentist's chair for a patient undergoing a number of extractions, and this too, fails to wrinkle his brow.

But, just for good measure, the producer has thrown in several pieces of business where the mighty man of muscle has to display a romantic interest in a dance-hall girl. It is this deal that gives Anderson most of his shakes.

"Sure, I like girls—I think I'd sooner spend my time with them than with my weights—but it's the idea of doing all that love stuff right out in front of the camera," he says. "Enough to unnerve even the strongest man—which I guess means me."

To look at Anderson now you'd never in a lifetime feel that anyone could ever have called him a sissy, but that's the way it used to be, he disclosed.

When he was a child he was rather on the skinny side, with a huge crop of curly hair.

He also had to take music lessons and carry his violin past all the neighborhood toughies.

If these same kids could see him in his present gargantuan state their former bravado would forever disappear.

As Anderson tells it, he finds he gets stronger all the time. As weight lifters go, he's just starting. Most men in this field, he points out modestly, don't reach their peak until the mid-thirties.

"I just hope I don't faint when that camera starts turning," he added, with a mammoth sigh.

AN INDIAN film, "Aparajita," made by Satyajit Ray, was singled out for special praise at the Venice Festival.

Critic Molly Plowright, said that "Aparajita" which won the Gold Lion—the highest award at the festival—was a film of "remarkable beauty and simplicity"—a story of family life, flowing along with the gentle unexcitability of a river, washing away tragedy and sorrow, reflecting in its serene surface the fact of all mankind.

"The delicate glitter of the Indian scene—the temples, bells, candlelight and sculptured stone—charm the eye. In modest shape and black and white photography, Mr. Satyajit Ray's "Aparajita" is a model of its kind."

NUCLEAR AGE DOES NOT HERALD PUSH-BUTTON WAR

ADMIRAL Arleigh A. Burke, beginning his second term of two years as Chief of Naval Operations, has these significant observations to make:

1. The Russian Navy is not only expanding, but it is beginning to "show the flag."
2. The Russian merchant marine, widening its field of operations, is carrying more and more trade between ports of free nations.
3. American policy and strategy are flexible, and are being constantly adjusted to changing factors—international, scientific and economic.
4. The United States Navy is "the precision instrument of national policy"—as exemplified in the role of the Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean during the Jordan crisis.
5. One of the greatest problems confronting the military of this country is to keep strong and swift to retaliate without undermining the country's economic strength—since costs of modern weapons are becoming terrific.
6. Competition among differing military viewpoints is the vital lifeblood of military alertness and progress—which could be stifled by any attempt to put all the services in one uniform under one command, or put control of any single modern weapon in the hands of any one service.

No Push-Button

Admiral Burke, one of the keenest military minds in the West, warns against the belief that we are entering a period of push-button war and that the only fighting we will have to do is to use the index finger on an instrument panel to destroy the enemy.

"THERE IS NO SUCH THING AS A PUSH-BUTTON WAR," ADMIRAL BURKE SAID. "THE SIDE THAT RELIES ON PUSH-BUTTONS WILL LOSE TO THE SIDE THAT USES ITS COLLECTIVE HEAD AND WITS."

"The policy of the United States is to participate in collective security in a world at peace to enable all nations and people to prosper. The Communists, of course, want to dominate the world. We don't want to dominate the world. Neither do we want anyone else to dominate it. It is not to the advantage of the Communists to start a war when they will be annihilated in the process, even though, in that war they, too, might be able to annihilate us.

"Therefore, as long as we maintain the capability of annihilating them, I don't think the Communists will risk a war of annihilation. But that doesn't mean that they are not going to push in other ways, because they are.

"Even under the threat of a war of extinction, the Communists may try restricted ventures and employ limited, or more subtle, indirect force. No matter what they do, we must have the ability and the willingness and all the other things necessary to counter them successfully."

Here in question-and-answer form, Admiral Burke discusses many of the vital problems of security with frankness and in detail.

Q. Has there been any change in the U.S. policy and strategy during your first term as chief of naval operations?

A. "Yes, there are always gradual changes in policy and strategy. Changes come about because of many factors. When the international situation changes, national policies change.

"If you look at the national policy two years ago and now, fundamentally, it is the same, but there are many variants because situations change—in the Suez crisis, for example, and the new American Middle East policy.

"The Hungarian situation changed it. The shift in Soviet leadership changed the situation. All of these things change policy."

Missilised

Q. What about strategy?

A. "Strategy changes a little bit, too. Other nations affect our policy and consequently, our strategy; changes in weapons and changes in techniques also affect them.

"The nuclear submarine is coming in for sure now. Guided missiles are much further along than they were. Ballistic missiles are coming along in several countries. Aircraft have improved.

"Things are much more expensive than they were two years ago, and that's a very important part of strategy—to make sure that you don't go broke in the process. The army has reduced its need for close combat air support. They are going in more for missiles and, consequently, require less combat air support.

"We have changed our dispositions at sea. We are getting more missilised.

"We have different equipment to carry out our change of strategy. Fundamentally, however, naval strategy doesn't change—not very much."

Q. Will you explain why, please?

A. "Well, because the basic mission is to control the seas in the event of war. The methods by which you maintain control of the seas change. Your tactics change, ships change, but basic strategy does not.

"The basic strategy is just like it always has been. In order to control the sea, you destroy the threat to that control—you destroy the threat wherever it is—and that has always been true."

Q. Why are they furtive about it?

A. "They can't be open about it with their form of Government. They have things to hide."

Q. Hasn't there been considerable movement of Soviet naval ships lately, through the Straits, the Black Sea, the Mediterranean?

A. "Yes, there has been, and even more than that. The Soviets have sent several cruisers to Albania. They sent a cruiser from the Black Sea through the Straits of Gibraltar and around to the Baltic. They have moved a drydock from the Black Sea into the Mediterranean."

Q. Where are the submarines which the Russians gave the Egyptians going to be stationed?

Admiral Arleigh A. Burke

Q. Has anything happened to make the navy outmoded today, or useless, or just an appendage?

A. "Well, take the Suez and Jordan crises, the difficulties in the Middle East as well as in the Far East. The navy showed that it was what somebody said about it the other day—the navy is the precision instrument of national power."

Q. Will you please explain that?

A. "Well, this is what I mean. When we want to do just little things, we can do them precisely without stepping on anybody's toes internationally, or interfering with anybody else's business, or getting any complaints from anybody—because we can move into position where we want to move without crossing any frontiers.

"And yet we can get close enough to the trouble to show we can apply force if necessary. The navy has the ability to apply the degree of force that is necessary to do the job and not more, because more might be too much for what should be done."

Q. Some critics say it takes the navy so long to get anywhere, as for example, in the recent Jordan crisis, it took the Sixth Fleet two and a half days to get to its destination.

A. "Yes, it took two and a half days to get over there, true. But the minute the fleet was ordered to sail, the good was done. (Jordan King) Hussein realised that he was going to get help against possible external aggression."

"When the fleet moves and shows its flag—it gives pause to an aggressor."

"The risks of all out war are so great today, it is just as well that a would-be aggressor is given time to reconsider what he is up to instead of being panicked into action from which there is no retreat."

"Also our fleets can quickly counter all-out attacks because they operate overseas close to potential trouble areas. It is difficult to plan an attack against a fleet at sea because it is always on the move."

Red Navy

Q. Apparently the Soviets were impressed by the movement of the Sixth Fleet. Aren't the Soviets now beginning to recognise the psychological effect of the Navy? It that what is responsible for the passage of a couple of destroyers and an oil tanker through the Suez and their appearance in the Pacific?

A. "Well, partly that, and partly because the Soviet Fleet is getting bigger and the Soviets are expanding their operating areas. The Soviet naval ships are going to see more often. The Soviets also realise the influence of ship visits—showing the flag, we used to call it, and still do.

"The Soviets had some exchanges of visits with foreign nations. If they were completely free and above board with it, it would be a lot more effective."

"WHERE THEY MISS IS THAT THEY ARE NOT COMPLETELY FRANK. THEY ARE NOT OPEN."

Q. Why are they furtive about it?

A. "They can't be open about it with their form of Government. They have things to hide."

Q. Hasn't there been considerable movement of Soviet naval ships lately, through the Straits, the Black Sea, the Mediterranean?

A. "Yes, there has been, and even more than that. The Soviets have sent several cruisers to Albania. They sent a cruiser from the Black Sea through the Straits of Gibraltar and around to the Baltic. They have moved a drydock from the Black Sea into the Mediterranean."

Q. Where are the submarines which the Russians gave the Egyptians going to be stationed?

A. "Apparently in Alexandria. That is where they are now. I hear they are flying the Egyptian flag now—of course, still with Soviet crews. They will train some Egyptian crews, and have, as a matter of fact, already trained some of them."

Q. Is this an indication of an expanding Soviet navy and its growing activity?

A. "Yes, there are other things to note which are important. Take their Merchant Marine. They are commencing to charter out their ships. Their merchant ships are plying the world trade routes between free countries, not necessarily just between the Russian Bloc countries, the way they used to do."

Q. What significance is there to the closing of Vladivostok Harbour?

A. "It is probable that the Soviets are increasing their operating areas. They have a lot more ships out there than they used to have."

Q. Are they still building submarines?

A. "They are building submarines all over, yes."

Q. "What have they done about nuclear submarines?"

A. "They are trying to build them, but I don't know that they have completed any. We know that they started building one. They said they were starting quite some time ago, so it is possible for them to have one now. I don't know."

Q. In addition to submarines to the Egyptians, are the Soviets giving anything to any other Communist bloc or vassal nation?

A. "They will continue to give equipment, their older equipment to some of their satellites. The Chinese Communists and the North Koreans, for example, have been given some older ships—some submarines and smaller ships. That can be expected, they will keep pushing."

Q. What about our navy? What is your feeling about its (Continued on Page 12, Col. 1)

Art Notes By D. G. Vyas

INDIAN art of the ancient times is a distinctive heritage.

This is the opinion freely expressed in every country in which it is shown.

Independence has brought India's art heritage into greater prominence and has led to its better appreciation in the world; but what is needed for it is correct and practical assessment and not mere admiration in words.

Practical assessment means the exact place which should be assigned to Indian art in the world art.

This was, so far, withheld from India, but now it seems that the position is slowly changing.

The Press comment on the exhibition of photographs of Indian temples currently shown in New York almost amounts to admission of an error of omission.

IT CONVEYS A REASSURING IMPRESSION THAT THE WEST HAS AT THIS LATE HOUR BEGUN TO REALISE THE UNIQUE GRANDEUR OF INDIAN ART.

The writer is the art critic of the "New York Times," and the assertion made by him in words like "no monuments in the world are more astonishing than these temples crowded with sculpture, often humorous and always spirited and alive" is indeed encouraging.

Older Than Taj

The exuberance of sculpture in temples might appear to be quaint to the Western eye, but it does not detract from the grandeur imparted by art to the temples as architectural monuments.

Western scholars in the past were extremely eloquent in extolling the Taj Mahal, and consequently the Taj Mahal came to be admired almost as the eighth wonder of the world.

This was, no doubt, the correct appreciation of this great monument of the Moghul period, but the writings of such scholars created in the Western mind a fallacious impression that there was nothing else in India as unique and older in age than the Taj Mahal.

"Anxiety" by Harish Raut, whose paintings were exhibited last week at the Jehangir Art Gallery.

Perhaps the writers had failed to appreciate the relative merits of other monuments of earlier times.

The line of thinking adopted by the Western scholars was faithfully followed by some of the Indian authors, and the result was that the rare beauty of temple art was missed.

For example, the Kailas of Ellora which is a marvel of sculpture and architectural construction is one of the few monuments to which due justice is not yet done.

The cave architecture is a supreme achievement of India, and a monolithic temple carved out from within and without a colossal rock and exquisitely decorated with sculpture should rank as a superb monument, but this point was missed by Western scholars and also by their Indian annotators.

Why was the expert opinion in the West indifferent to the compelling beauty of temple monuments of the rare type?

The reply given by the "New York Times" art critic as "strange and difficult, though Indian art may appear to Western eyes" is to a certain extent true.

The inability of Western scholars to understand thoroughly the peculiar characteristics of temple art might be taken as a cause of the error of omission if not commission on their part.

But in this connection, the "New York Times" critic, while asserting that "Christian prejudice and a devotion to the beautiful and majestic forms of Greek art blinded the eyes of the earlier traveller," points to the correct position.

Greek art was built up through ages as a classic art of the world—perfect and supreme in conception, style and form.

Consequently ancient art of any other country had come to be placed below it in rank.

This is where Indian art has hitherto stood as regards the estimation of its merits by the world.

BUT THE WORLD OPINION BY WHICH SUPEREMINENCE WAS CONCEDED TO THE ANCIENT ART OF GREECE IS NOW BEING SLOWLY REVISED AND APPEARS TO BE GRAVITATING TOWARDS INDIA.

This is implied by the "New York Times" critic in his statement which runs as "Western appreciation of the peculiar beauties of Indian art is a recent development."

This is the proper time for Indian art to assert itself as a distinct type.

Of course, India is welcome to maintain that its art is in character, she would prefer to refrain from being aggressive in her attitude.

Self-contentment is a virtue but only to a limited extent. So far as her classical art is concerned, India would not be unduly ambitious, if she insists upon its correct appraisal on an international level, and claims for it its just recognition as a part of the classic art of the world.

The question is one of securing universal recognition of the art heritage as a whole, and not of a monument or two selected without consideration of others of higher, if not of equal values.

Art Heritage

THE Raja Sabha has given its approval to The Hague Convention 1954 sponsored by the UNESCO for the protection of cultural property.

India was among the several countries by whom the Convention was signed, and now it will be ratified by the Government of India.

Although this convention was drawn up in 1954 and 50 countries were signatories to it, the procedure of ratification has been unduly protracted.

This reflects the attitude of leisurely consideration given to matters artistic and cultural in international relations.

The Convention is drawn up as an international agreement. Technically, it would be truly so when it is signed by all the countries without exception, and then it would at least reflect acceptance, by the signatories, of the principle that art and cultural monuments are a world heritage.

TO BE AN EFFECTIVE INSTRUMENT OF PROTECTION, SUCH A CONVENTION SHOULD BE TREATED AS A SOLEMN UNDERTAKING AND THEREFORE INVOLVING THE SIGNATORIES IN ANY EVENT.

It should be a testimony of the will and determination on their part to protect at any cost, in times of war, whatever is accepted by them as world heritage.

It is understood that an international register of cultural properties to be selected for special protection in war time is being compiled by the UNESCO.

This is the right step to be taken as a sequence of the Convention. The register should be an open document to be circulated among the signatories.

"No, I'm not troubled by improper thoughts—I enjoy them!"

However every country, which may be party to the Convention, should maintain its own register as a part of the UNESCO's records of the Convention.

Unexplored

MONUMENTS on the surface are receiving direct or indirect attention of the authorities but now others lying hidden underneath the surface are also to be brought to light.

The Archaeological Survey of India has proposed under the Second Five-Year Plan, a country-wide survey of tapping uncharted archaeological sites and monuments.

The plan is to conduct a village-to-village survey. It will be entrusted to scholars, who will be styled as Exploration Assistants.

The survey is intended to provide clues for large-scale excavations to be carried out on selected sites.

Although the survey, according to the proposal, is to be conducted on a country-wide scale, priority in its plan should be assigned to the regions which have, hitherto, remained unexplored.

There are regions which are likely to yield fruitful results if they are carefully surveyed and studied. And they may be equally ancient like others.

ONE OF THEM IS CUTCH WHICH WAS, SO FAR NEGLECTED AND LOOKED UPON AS A BARREN LAND HAVING NOTHING OF HISTORICAL, ARTISTIC OR CULTURAL VALUES UNDERNEATH ITS SURFACE.

When some fine monuments of ancient times are seen in Cutch, it is quite probable that excavations if carried out on selected sites might bring to light hidden antiquities.

Cutch should be considered as a fertile soil for the search of the vestiges of the most ancient civilisations like those which were unearthed at Mohenjo-daro and Harappa.

The largest share of this money has gone to the Seven-Year Plan Organisation, for economic development of the country.

America's foreign aid programme has spent $2,327,000,000 in Iran since 1952, and works closely with the Plan Organisation.

There has been much criticism of waste, scattered efforts and "show-case projects" in the American programme, which was thrown in to stop the Communists when they were on their way to power.

But the programme accomplished what it was supposed to do—stop Communism.

It's been a combination of enlightened monarchy, dictatorship and a dose of democracy—with a promise of more freedom in the future.

In 1954, the Government's National Iranian Oil Co. entered an agreement with American and European firms for operation of the Persian Gulf fields. Oil revenue has returned, and Iran last year earned a $152,000,000 profit.

There is great hope for the community development projects, which are patterned after the scheme that is raising the standard of living in India's rural villages.

American aid has been directed at basic needs, such as industrial development, transportation, agriculture and food production, technical training, health and education. Malaria, for example, has been almost wiped out.

Tehran now has safe drinking water, where six years ago it was the world's largest city without a piped water system.

But badly-needed land reform has been a slow process, despite the Shah's example in distributing part of his own vast holdings among the landless peasants.

Unfortunately, other wealthy landlords have not followed the Shah's example.

CARD-SHARPER TURNS BIG CRUSADER

NEW YORK.
JOHN SCARNE can deal four aces to himself whenever he handles the cards; he can throw a seven every time he casts the dice.

The little card-sharper from New Jersey knows the exact odds in any gambling game, yet he never gambles. In fact, he is devoting his life to exposing fakery, not only in games of chance but in other manifestations of human gullibility such as mind-reading and hypnotism.

The dark-eyed, curly-headed campaigner for honesty is also the world's greatest living magician.

He has baffled presidents, generals, admirals and plain folk at private entertainments, and such notorious professional gamblers as Arnold Rothstein, Sussie Siegel and Willie Moretti, each of whose careers ended in sudden death from a gangster's bullet.

He has defeated the feats of such famous magicians as Harry Houdini, the "Card Thief" and Dan Brown.

He could be a millionaire if he would put his talents to dishonest use, but, he says, he won't bet.

Won't Cheat

"Maybe it's a quirk in my nature," he explains.

"I can't cheat, and since I know that the odds are against winning in any honest gambling game, I'd rather be what I am."

The 53-year-old Scarne is the author of "The Amazing World of John Scarne," a best-seller, as well as five previous works on cards, dice and magic.

John was born Orlando Vameo Scarnechia, son of an immigrant millhand in Steubenville, Ohio.

Later his family moved to West Hoboken, N. J.

The Hoboken area, across the Hudson river from New York city, was then the haunt of gamblers and quick-money artists hauled from the metropolis.

"My father could do a few card tricks," he relates, "and by the time I was seven I had a mastered them."

"In school I discovered I had a camera-mind—I could glance at a column of figures and add them up in my head."

He won his school's marbles championship, froze out his pals in penny-foots.

"But cards and dice tempted me most," he continues. "I spent hours learning how to palm cards and control dice and by the time I was 15 I was eager to try my luck in real games."

Lucky Switch

On summer week-ends card players gathered at outdoor tables in nearby Columbia amusement park.

"I soon realized that the early birds were petty gamblers looking for suckers," John relates. "I watched one called Lucky switch aces into his hand from under his apron. Home I went and practised the 'switch,' usually in the cellar where I wouldn't be disturbed by my mother."

"I WAS A FRESH KID AND GOT ACQUAINTED WITH LUCKY, WHO SHOWED ME A FEW MORE TRICKS. THEN I SALLIED FORTH TO BEGIN MY CAREER."

John succeeded in edging his way into a banker-and-broker game in a Hoboken cellar.

He had dol. 8 in his pocket when it started and just 75 cents when he noticed that one of the players was cheating.

"I got mad. Jumped up and denounced the cheater," he recalls. "The others jumped him, a knife was flashed and I ran away."

The next day John read that a player had been stabbed and the others arrested.

Master Deals

His next step up the ladder was the discovery of a store which dealt in crooked dice, cards and gambling devices.

He bought a stock of marked cards and with advice from the store's proprietor began a course in shuffling, cutting and dealing himself winning hands.

"I practised as much as eight hours a day, at home, on my job in an embroidery factory, on trolley cars and in movie theatres."

"I learned how to deal myself any card I pleased and to cut an exact number from the deck. Finally I evolved a trick of my own, one that has puzzled everyone from that day to this."

It was the wallet trick, which no other magician has duplicated.

John asks a subject to pick a card, write his name on it and return it to the deck. A second person shuffles and cuts the cards, returns them to John who then puts his hand in his pocket and produces the card from his wallet.

How to deal a crooked poker hand is demonstrated to a group by Scarne.

"It's sheer trickery," he says. "If you want to spend 10 months practising it, you can do it, too."

By working the wallet trick before the dealer in crooked equipment, John next learned how racketeers make fortunes on slot machines and punchboards.

"In those days slot machines against an electrical device on counter, or stands in certain spot on the floor.

"Slow wheels are the grifter's most profitable investment. He can make the indicator fall on any number he pleases."

By the mid-1920's John Scar-

For 10 years he waged war table-rappers, clairvoyants and self-styled telepathists.

"Mediums are magicians, plain or complicated," he declares.

"Rappings are mechanically produced; stoges operate lights to battle those who sit in on seances; and ectoplasm can be bought in magic stores. Mind readers either work by code or by using electronic listening devices to pick up tips as to whether it's a watch that's being held up or a frankfurter."

Today John Scarne is still looking for proof that telepathy is a scientific fact.

He has offered dol. 100,000 to anyone who will read the serial numbers on a dol. 1 bill which he will seal in an envelope, and no one has taken up his challenge.

BY CHARLES DEXTER paid off 20 to 1 whenever three symbols were lined up," he explains.

"The dishonest operator could fix the machine by removing the brake on two of the symbols, making a payoff impossible."

Dice Trick

"Dice are easily fixed by shaving a few millimeters off one side or by putting lead paint into recesses showing the pips, and then coating the pips properly white or black, so the lead won't show. And a clever player can control the dice fairly well merely by manipulating them."

"Cards, too, are shaved, marked, made convex, so that cuts may be executed with ease. Even a kid like me could deal seconds," the card below the top, whenever I pleased."

John's hands have been called the fastest in the world.

His repertoire of tricks grew. "But I had promised my mother I would never gamble after that stabbing. I kept my word."

A carnival came to Hoboken. John drifted into the freaks' tent.

He showed his card tricks to the Great Dagmer, the magician.

And soon he was asking for the secrets of other performers.

"THE FIRE-EATER SHOWED ME HOW TO SWALLOW FIRE SAFELY BY FETTERING MY LIPS AND BLOWING OUTWARD THROUGH MY NOSE AS I BURNED THE TORCH INTO MY MOUTH."

I balked at eating glass, which the glass-eater did, regurgitating the splinters afterwards.

"And although I thought sword-swallowing was a trick, I learned it wasn't—the swordswallower actually puts the blade into his stomach by using extraordinary muscular control."

"But the strong man did not smash a stone with his naked fist; the stone was limestone, previously smashed by a hammer and then reunited by immersion in water overnight."

John joined the carnival for a time.

Before he quit he had learned how gambling concessionaires make their money.

"Never try to win a watch at ring toss; the watch rests on a velvet-covered stand," he warns.

"The wooden hoop may fall over the watch but it will be repelled upwards by the velvet, and you'll be told you haven't completely ringed the watch."

"Ball games in which you roll a wooden ball down a slanted incline to win a prize for a certain score may be rigged, too. The numbers on each hole are painted lightly—the operator adds them quickly in his head and if you've won he can call the wrong number, sweepink the balls away before you have time to check."

Wheel Games

"Wheel games in which a player is paid off if the indicator falls on certain numbers or colours are easily rigged mechanically."

"The wheel can be stopped by the operator as he leans ne was becoming known to the New York gambling fraternity as a clever card manipulator.

The whole nation was betting on the stock market.

If the big city operatives were making millions by winning coin tosses, playing stud poker or craps in "floating games" in which as high as dol. 300,000 changed hands in a single sitting.

One day John received a telephone call from Arnold Rothstein, king of the metropolitan gamblers.

Rothstein introduced him to a western gambler who offered him a 50-50 split if he would play in big money games in California and Nevada.

The young magician decided to turn down the offer.

The Greatest

"Magicians and mind-readers were having a heyday in the '20's," he says.

"Some were truly great entertainers, and I envied them. I showed my tricks to Harry Houdini, and became his close friend, acting as a scout for him by spying on his rivals."

"THE GREATEST WAS RAHMAN BEY, AN EAST INDIAN, WHO SUPPOSEDLY

"Oh, wrap up for a minute—I can't answer him AND you at the same time, can I?"

COULD STOP HIS HEART FROM BEATING AND THEN RUN HIS PULSE UP TO 180.

I just had to know how it was done, and also how Rahman could be put in a sealed bronze coffin and buried for an hour under water and earth, apparently in a cataleptic state.

Iconoclast

"I did master the trick of stopping my pulse and starting it again, but many of Rahman Bey's demonstrations such as poking hatpins through his flesh could not do, for such tricks were accomplished by years of practice, including the toughening of the flesh and nerves to resist pain."

"But I did Houdini's escape from a strait-jacket. It's easy, if you can force your arm over your head and control your muscles so that you can wriggle out of the jacket."

Houdini died in 1926 and John Scarne turned to the great escape-artist's favourite pastime, the exposure of fake spiritualist mediums and mind-readers.

WIZARD OF SNOOZE HAS GADGETS FOR THE SLEEPLESS

CHRONICLE CORRESPONDENT

NEW YORK.
NORMAN DINE spends most of his waking hours scheming up ways to make other people sleep. Dine began to study the rest and relaxation problem after he was cured of insomnia a couple of decades ago.

As a result, he recently opened a little shop in mid-Manhattan that features sleep-inducing gadgets of every variety.

A birdlike little man of 50 who looks a relaxed dol. Dine hopes to bring slumber to noisy New York.

So convinced is he of his sleep inducing powers that he likes to be known by such titles as "The Wizard of Snooze" and "Public Sandman No. 1."

Many Devices

Dine's wares range from bell-toned buzzers that set you nodding, to purring alarms that gently rouse you, a sleep-starting machine that stimulates "the drowsing effect of the beat of surf, or the buzz of insects," and a cushion equipped with a pulsator which sends soothing waves through that nerve-taxed torso.

"Visual Balm" is offered—a lamp with a slowly revolving shade that depicts pastel tinted fish swimming lazily in a pastel sea.

For those who can't sleep if a light is shining in their windows, a variety of eye shades have been provided including one with tiny peepholes for claustrophobic sleepers.

For others who can't sleep in the dark, there are nightgown lamps that pierce the gloom without penetrating the eyelids.

And he has ear-plugs capable of screening out a shotgun blast.

Other features are designed to make the sleeper safe and sane.

For smokers in bed, there is the "little robot" holder. This enables the smoker to puff through a flexible tube that faintly resembles a Turkish hookah while the cigarette is pinioned in a tray several feet away.

Nor are the little rest gadgets limited to the bedroom.

There are a number of rest inducers for use in daily life.

For the office worker who craves a little shut-eye after a large evening but doesn't want the boss to catch him, Dine has KULUHA Hill is in Chatra subdivision of Hazaribagh district in Bihar.

It is now approachable by a good motorable road which branches off from near Dhubhi on the Grand Trunk Road, or by a direct road from Chatra. Chatra is well connected with Hazaribagh the district headquarters.

There are two roads one is a direct road from Hazaribagh to Chatra which is not so good and the other road branches off from Champaran on Grand Trunk Road within Hazaribagh district and connects Chatra.

There is a rest bungalow at Huntergun, 6 miles from Kuluha hill. One has to walk up the hill by a bridge path.

Kuluha hill is the birth place of the Jain TIRTHANKAR, Shitalanath. But the importance of the place for the Jains was almost lost.

This hill was mentioned as an object of a local pilgrimage by Sir William Hunter.

It also finds mention in the list of Ancient Monuments of Bengal.

Pilgrimage

Mr. Nandlal De visited the hill in June, 1899, and gave a report to the Government.

Dr. M. A. Stein, who had visited the hill after Nandlal De, contributed an article which was published in the 'Indian Antiquary' in March, 1901.

Mr. Nandlal De took the ancient remains in the hill to be exclusively Buddhist.

He thought Kuluha hill was the 'Makala Parvata' of the Burmese Annals of Buddhism where Buddha passed the sixth rainy season.

Dr. Stein rightly controverted the erroneous theory of M. Nandlal De that the antiquities on the Kuluha Hill are Buddhist and strongly held the view in his article published in the 'Indian Antiquary' that they were Jain in origin.

IT, HOWEVER, APPEARS THAT DR. STEIN DID NOT MENTION IN HIS ARTICLE THAT KULUHA HILL WAS THE BIRTH PLACE OF THE JAIN TIRTHANKAR—SHI TALANATH.

Dr. Stein's description of the hill could be quoted: "The hill known locally as the 'Kuluha Pahar' is formed by a projecting spur of the great range which runs along the northern edge of the plateau of Hazaribagh."

It consists of a series of steep basaltic ridges, running in the general direction of north to south and culminating in a pinnacle of bold crags, which reach to a height of 1,575 feet above sea-level, as fixed by the Trigonometrical Survey.

Owing to its height and bold form, the hill is a very conspicuous object in the landscape, as seen from the plains of Shergahly sub-division.

Now the sub-division is known as Sadar sub-division of Hazaribagh district.

Dvarapala

Dr. Stein continued:—"The top of the Kuluha hill is approached by two paths only, one leading up from Hatwaria village on the west, and the other from a valley which skirts the hill, on the east."

"Then the proper ascent begins over bare basaltic roads of remarkably large size which face the whole west side of the hill. They are so steep and so bare of vegetation that for one not bare-footed it is a matter of some difficulty to scramble up. After an ascent of about 400 feet, a wall of even steeper but smaller cliffs is met."

"Here a regular path is formed by broad steps cut into the rock. This path leads to a point about 200 feet higher up through the gateway of an ancient wall to the plateau near the hill top."

"This plateau of rock basin—for this name would be equally applicable for a part of the area boulder overlying a fissure in the rock."

Inside this grotto there is a very finely chiselled image of Parshvanath seated with the usual snake-hood above the head.

Two Images

Dr. Stein describes this in the following words:—"Inside is a well-preserved image of the Jina Parshvanath, seated and surmounted by the usual snake-hood. The latter sculpture which is about 2 ft. high is carved in a black basaltic stone and seems distinctly old."

"The interstices between the rocks serving as side walls and the boulders there filled with bricks 9 inch square and 2 1/2 inches thick. Close to the west of this is another small grotto containing a seated Jina in the conventional posture."

As the Chinna engraved on the pedestals is effaced, the Jina intended cannot be ascertained. Judging from the red lead marks on these sculptures, they seem to enjoy the orthodox attention of the pilgrims."

"Descending from Bhimbhar towards the temple a small rock-ground tank is passed and near it two small images placed below a tree."

"They measure 1 1/2 ft. in height and damaged by exposure are yet clearly recognised as representations of Jinas. The pedestal of one of them bears a short inscription of which, however, only the date Samvat 1443 can be made out with any certainty."

"The scenic beauty of the top of Kuluha Hill is superb. Unfortunately the place has been neglected by the Jains and there are no rest-sheds for the visitors or the pilgrims."

Some of the loose Jaina images that were observed a few years back no longer exist and speculation is used as to where they have been removed.

The Hindu shrine of Kuleshvari receives a large number of visitors, mostly women on particular occasions. Tradition also associates Kuluha Hill as one of the places where the Pandava brothers spent a part of their living incognito (Agnat Vasa) during the banishment.

About 130 feet to the south-east of the gate there is a temple of Kulesvari Devi, which is a Hindu shrine. About 125 yards to the south of the temple and on the rocky crest of the transverse ridge is a large isolated boulder Bhimbhar.

Senator Has Novel Way Of Relaxing

Chronicle Correspondent

WASHINGTON.
THE Johnson ranch deep in the heart of Texas will become a major nerve and news centre for Democratic politics after Congress adjourns.

The owner, Senate majority leader Lydon B. Johnson, loves politics, people and his ranch.

So, when Congress winds up this session, the welcome mat goes down and Johnson turns host in his own 100-cylinder hospitality operation.

Senator Estes Kefauver (D. Tenn.) was once given the full Johnson treatment on a 24-hour visit—including a dinner party lasting well into the night, a 4 a. m. swim in the heated outdoor pool, an early morning deer hunt in which Kefauver bagged an eight-pointer at 320 paces and a late morning press conference which brought 50 photographers and reporters by plane from all points in Texas (and two from Chicago).

The easy-going Tennessean leaned wearily against a live-oak tree and said in awe: "Is this the way Lyndon relaxes?"

Johnson's sprawling, rambling stone and white frame ranch home on the banks of the Pedernales (pronounced Purr-de-nal-es) river will be a remote political centre located in the cedar breaks of the rocky hill country in the vicinity of Johnson City, which was named after the Senator's grandfather.

American soldiers remain in Greenland as guests of the Danish Government and one of the stipulations is that there be as little as possible contact with natives.

Its wisdom easily can be appreciated, the engineer officers say. Through the centuries the natives have built up very little resistance to disease germs of any sort.

These natives are not "Eskimos," and especially resent the term. They are Greenlanders, a mixture primarily of Eskimo and Scandinavian with traces of about every race on earth, due to the presence of traders and sealers in these waters through much of the 19th century.

Most of the people have dark, hairless skin, straight black hair and slant eyes.

There are, however, blond, freckled Greenlanders and occasionally a redhead.

They retain the Eskimo language in which they publish their own newspapers.

U.S. Army Camp Near First NewWorldChurch

By THOMAS R. HENRY

NARSARSSUAQ, Greenland.
A SMALL group of American Army engineers are camped here near the site of the first white colony and the first Christian church in the new world.

The oldest son of Erik Thorvaldson—founder of the colony and better known as Erik The Red due to his propensity for murder—was a mild, highly introverted boy named Leif who seemed quite unfitted for the rough-and-ready life of a tenth century Greenland farmer.

Rather disdainfully his father sent him back to Norway to be educated.

By that time a new religion had come to northern Europe. It was a creed almost exactly contrary to everything Erik ever had believed or practised.

The impressionable Leif was converted.

He came back to Greenland, discovering the North American continent on the way by accident, accompanied by a Christian priest.

Missionary

Leif appears to have been a persuasive missionary.

His first convert was his mother who, about 1000 A. D. built a stone church near this engineer post. It was by all odds the first church in the Western Hemisphere. The ruins still are here.

Leif is better known in history as Leif the Lucky.

His contemporaries didn't call him "lucky" because he had almost by pure luck, made perhaps the greatest geographic discovery in all history but because of his luck in being able to save so many souls for the Lord.

Dr. John R. Swanton of the Smithsonian Institution once wrote: "Why this man was not canonised centuries ago to me is one of the mysteries of history."

For nearly 400 years the Greenland colony on the site of the American engineer camp apparently survived, prosperous at first but eventually fighting a day by day struggle for existence.

Drop Out

Then, due to political changes and to the Black Death which had decimated the population of northern Europe, all contact with Iceland and Norway was lost and the settlers on the fjord drop out of history.

Their last communication with Europe was in 1411.

There are several theories as to what happened.

Excavating engineers may run on to some clues, but many archaeologists have tried to solve the mystery before.

A LIKELY EXPLANATION. THEY SAY, IS THAT THE CLIMATE CHANGED MUCH FOR THE WORSE THROUGHOUT THE ARCTIC BASIN. AS IT IS NOW CHANGING MUCH FOR THE BETTER.

LOUELLA'S WEEK-END MUSINGS

IN AND AROUND BOMBAY

MUSIC ACCENTS HARMONY AS DO OTHER ARTS

Sunday Gem.

You cannot dream yourself into a character; you must hammer and forge yourself one.

A CHARYA VINOBA BHAVE COMPLETED HIS 63RD BIRTHDAY IN CELEBRATION OF WHICH A LARGE PUBLIC MEETING WAS HELD AT THE ST. XAVIER'S COLLEGE HALL UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE BHODAN SEVA KARYALAYA.

Presiding on the occasion, the Chief Minister, Mr. Chavan, rightly compared the Acharya with the Mahatma in his efforts to bring about economic and social justice, and in creating self-confidence among the illiterate masses. Among those who spoke on this occasion which may come to be known as Bhodan Jayanti, were the Mayor, Mr. Donde, the Rev. Father Cortadellas, Mr. P. F. Masani and Mr. Kedarnath.

They described the Bhodan movement as a great spiritual force that would have a far-reaching significance in bringing about a new social order among different classes of society.

Textiles

INDIA has been the home of textiles for several centuries and many of her rich, handwoven materials used to find their way into the leading markets of the world.

Indian textiles, along with other forms of art and industry, have received a tremendous "re-awakening" since the dawn of independence, and their popularity is steadily rising both at home and abroad. For home decoration and articles of household utility, Indian textiles can compete with some of the fine products from foreign markets, taking into consideration the comparatively low price.

The infinite variety of designs, texture and colouring make them adaptable for all sorts of practical purposes—bedspreads, curtains, teapoy covers and table cloths, tapestry and carpeting—the housewife can have little difficulty in making her selection. In few other countries is the art of weaving so well embedded in the very life of the people as in India, where age-old traditions of weaving, printing and embroidery have produced a vast variety of fabrics, brilliant in texture, colour and design.

Handloom House

CELEBRATING its first anniversary with a colourful function was the Handloom House.

Many guests had responded to the invitation to the All-India Handloom Fabrics Marketing Co-operative Society, and much interest was evinced in the colourful display of handwoven fabrics.

Several of the ladies present were sporting the current fashion, and we noticed some in cottons that gave a cool and starched look, the nylon and chiffons that were suitable for slim figures, the silks that had a tendency to cling, and the heavier brocades that lent an air of distinction and struck a note of glamour.

Floral Art

THE promotion of a better knowledge and understanding and appreciation of the art, literature, culture, philosophy and economics of Japan and India is the principal aim of the Indo-Japanese Association.

Flower arrangement is a traditional art in Japan, where the women pay a great deal of attention to the cultivation of this branch of their education. The beautiful land of Nippon abounds in natural glory, and children at a very early age develop an appreciation and love for the endless beauties of nature.

The Jehangir Art Gallery was fragrant with flowers at an exhibition of flower arrangement in the Japanese style, representing the different forms of classical, modern and traditional arrangements.

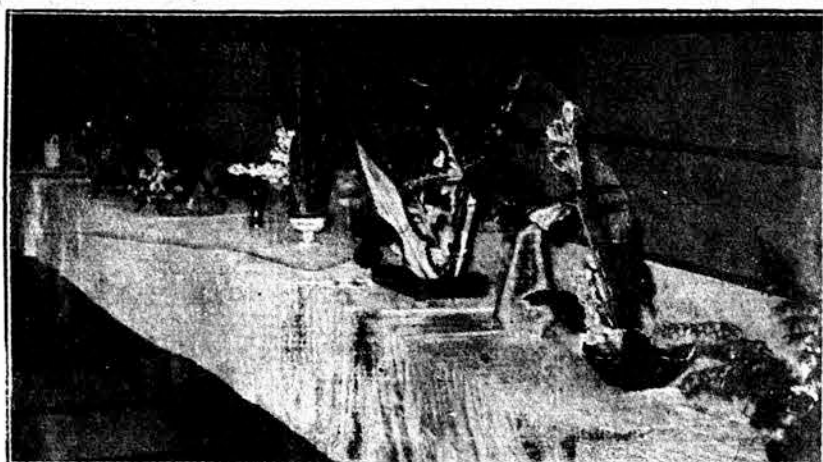

The exhibition was sponsored by the Indo-Japanese Association. A number of Japanese ladies, as well as Indian members of the Association demonstrated the style and technique of Japanese floral art.

The Consul-General for Japan, Mr. Ozawa who declared open this exhibition, expressed his appreciation of the keen interest evinced by Indian ladies in this typical Japanese art and paid a tribute to Mrs. Anil Desai for the competent manner in which she conducts the classes.

An artistically decorated vase or bowl of flowers would brighten any room, apart from pleasing the aesthetic sense of most human beings.

THE British Council cordially invites those who are interested to the forthcoming meetings arranged at their premises at French Bank Building.

On September 24 will be an "Introduction to Indian sculpture" by Mr. Lance Dane, who has made a thorough study of Indian sculpture, and will illustrate his talk by slides and sculptures from his own collection.

A discussion on "Community Development" will take place between Captain S. P. Mohite, Mr. L. S. Kudchadker and Mr. E. Wood, on Thursday, September 26 while Professor H. R. Pitt, Mr. C. Taylor, Mr. M. Zinkin and Mrs. T. Zinkin, and Mr. B. Barker will constitute the panel for a "Brains Trust" on Friday, September 27.

Past Associates

THE NOWROJI Wadia College of Poona celebrated an important occasion—its silver jubilee—that caused a flutter of excitement among students past and present in their week-long activities.

By virtue of its proximity to Bombay, there are many folk who literally have one foot here and the other there. Many erstwhile students having now taken up their abode in Bombay, the Silver Jubilee celebrations naturally had their echo in our city!

Nearly a hundred past students, men and women married or otherwise assembled in the Ruparel College for a get-together dinner, indulging in many a reminiscence of their happy, care-free college days. Self-introductions were evident each one manifesting a desire to know how the other had progressed since leaving the college portals!

Coming specially from Poona to participate in the celebration were Principal Suru, Prof. Dangle, Dr. Devare, Miss Minchichernomji, Prof. Bedekar and Mr. Khadye.

The young man with the Bing Crosby style of singing, Mr. Homi Lalkaka was requested for some vocal entertainment which was highly applauded.

One of the popular college songs which he rendered later found a ready chorus who must have undoubtedly wondered at the response their memory gave despite the lapse of time!

Symphony In Art

NOT many devotees of art and music consciously realise the 'close relationship which exists between their respective Muses.

Of course the co-relation between painting and sculpture on the one hand and music on the other can be far better imagined than described.

Inasmuch as the appreciation of a work of art is a purely subjective, individual experience, it would be futile to attempt to formulate rigid canons of criticism in relation to standards of art and music, as in other fields of human endeavour.

An artist in her own right, as well as being an authority on painting, sculpture and architecture of the Renaissance period, Mrs. Hermione Lockyer gave expression to this point of view in the course of a very interesting and instructive lecture-demonstration on European art.

Addressing a select gathering of members of the Bombay Madrigal Singers' Organisation and the Bombay Gramophone Society at the air-conditioned auditorium of the United States Information Service, Mrs. Lockyer presented with the aid of coloured slides a kaleidoscopic pattern of European art through the ages with the accent on harmony of line and colour akin to the harmony achieved in a musical composition.

In her talk, which was embellished by a typically British sense of humour, Mrs. Lockyer furnished ample evidence of her deep knowledge of art and sculpture.

Endowed with a highly pleasing musical tone of speech, Mrs. Lockyer articulated every word with flawless clarity and intonation with the result that her speech has a very soothing effect upon the listener.

Her selection of representative slides to illustrate her talk was commendably appropriate. Sitting in the auditorium one felt oneself transported at times into an altogether different world of beauty and colour, into a bygone era of enviable antiquity and unsophisticated.

Whether it was a portrait by Rubens or a painting in the classical form by the incomparable Da Vinci or a cacophonous creation of Picasso, or Paul Klee or a modern masterpiece of Graham Sutherland, Mrs. Lockyer succeeded in communicating to her audience the symmetry of form and colour, the balanced harmony of pattern and design which characterised every picture.

In the crowded space of sixty minutes Hermione Lockyer made it possible for her audience, who hung on every word from her lips, to have an experience in aesthetic satisfaction which would be yielded only at the end of a prolonged visit to an art gallery.

The Founder's Day and the death anniversary of the Parsee philanthropist, Byramjee Jeejeebhoy was celebrated recently in the Byramjee Jeejeebhoy Parsee Charitable Institute, at Charni Road, Bombay. W. H. O. SPEEDS UP DRIVE TO STAMP OUT MALARIA

MANKIND'S immediate concern with its newest common enemy—the comparatively mild Asiatic flu—has detracted from notice of the great gains scored against an ancient and more deadly adversary—Malaria.

Today due principally to an historic decision taken by the World Health Organisation in 1955 "the disease of the intermittent fever" is on the retreat all over the world.

The W. H. O. proclaimed at a 1955 meeting in Mexico City that piecemeal attempts to control malaria must be abandoned in favour of a bold new strategy aimed at world-wide eradication within ten years. At that time, only 230 million of the 600 million persons exposed to malaria had been protected from the disease.

By last April 1, WHO estimates some 523 million persons had already, or were due shortly, to be fully protected.

Africa Defies

Of twenty countries of the Western Hemisphere where malaria was a menace, Chile and the U.S. have achieved total eradication.

In large parts of Europe, the disease has been eliminated. It is well in hand in South East Asia. Only in tropical Africa is the eradication programme still in the embryonic stage.

How has this been accomplished? For the answer it is necessary to trace the history of the disease whose icy chills, burning fevers, and dreadful debilitation have plagued humanity for thousands of years.

The importation of gambusia, the little fresh water fish that live on mosquito larvae, proved effective only under special conditions.

Then almost miraculously the picture changed. It was discovered that in most cases the anopheles feeds on its human victims indoors at night. If it were possible to prevent the blood-thirsty female of the species from feeding on human blood, or to kill her after she had fed but before the parasites she had absorbed had matured, the cycle of transmission would be broken.

An apparently insignificant, almost absurd, fact made it possible for the nations of the world to launch the successful campaign.

This was the discovery of the fact that the female 'anopheles' needed a nap after each meal and usually took it on the walls of the house in which she had fed.

Thai 'Coup' Is New Problem For SEATO

THE bloodless "coup d'etat" in Thailand seems to have upset nobody, though it is by all counts one of the most revolutionary events in South-East Asia in the post-war era.

The people are hardly concerned; Army officers who brought it about say that they have no interest in politics; and some U.S. officials in Washington fear no momentous changes.

One wonders why an epoch-making event is sought to be covered up by oily verbiage. Indeed, why should everybody be content with saying that nothing has happened?

The events themselves were alarming in the extreme. In the third week of August Thailand was put virtually under martial law when three Government members, including Marshal Sarit Thanarat, the Defence Minister resigned.

Ostensibly, the Ministers withdrew for medical reasons, which was true in a way, for their continuance in the Cabinet became definitely bad for their health.

Defection Three weeks later there was another political upheaval when 15 Army members of Parliament resigned from the cabinet.

FROM FOUR CORNERS By Veritas

ing party, bringing to a total of 61 the members of such armed forces representatives who deserted Songram since the resignation of Thanarat.

This defection was forced upon them because of the Cabinet's decision that permanent official posts should be separated from political posts.

The dissident Army officers were thus faced with the alternative of either quitting Parliament or giving up their Army jobs.

They went out of Parliament, but demanded that General Phao Srinayoud, the police chief (who was also Minister of the Interior), should resign. Under pressure of events, the Cabinet agreed and Phao quit the Government.

The Changeover

These were in themselves disturbing events and gave an inkling of the coup that was to burst later.

Thanarat's hand was itching for reprisals and, this week, he surrounded Bangkok with tanks and seized control of the Government.

MARSHAL PIBUL SONGRAM, PREMIER FOR THE LAST TEN YEARS, WAS THROWN OUT AND THANARAT TOOK OVER THE GOVERNMENT WITH THE REPORTED CONSENT OF KING PHUMIPHON ADUNDETH.

Thanarat declared with affected indifference that he had nothing to do with politics but acted because he wanted the Songram Cabinet to abdicate. Songram, it was alleged, retained his precarious position since the elections in February last, which were said to have been rigged.

The bane of Thailand, as of Indonesia, is the Army's preponderant role in politics and Thanarat's denials have no meaning.

Next Step

The most surprising part of what followed the coup was Thanarat's bland assertion that the country would not change its foreign policy, that it must carry on with U.S. aid and that its co-operation with SEATO would be continued.

The greater wonder was, that a few US officials in Washington, whose views on South-East Asia should be authoritative, behind that Thailand's pro-Western policy would not be changed.

It was also expected that the flow of U.S. military aid to Thailand would continue as usual.

There are limits to all this make-believe. Have the Army officers in Thailand whom Thanarat leads not always favoured Thailand's withdrawal from SEATO and closer ties with China?

And is Thanarat himself not associated closely with Bangkok's most rabidly anti-U.S. newspaper, which also voices the same opinions about Thailand's alignment as the Army officers?

One can expect the Thai Government now to ask the U.S. to withdraw its troops who are training the Thai Army.

More than 200 Army personnel of the Joint U.S. Military Advisory Group (JUSMAG) are in Thailand under a military aid agreement signed between the two countries some seven years ago.

Then, Thailand's loyalties must become more clear.

West Germany

THE victory of the Christian Democrats in the elections to the West German Bundestag once more reveals that the Germans are a nation of realists.

One can well understand the strong desire of every German for the reunification of his country—a sentiment to which the Social Democrats appealed with all the emphasis at their command—but what ultimately prevailed with the discerning electorate was the fact that the country had found progress and increasing security in the Western camp.

Both these achievements may prove illusory in the long run, for, in the last analysis, it is evident that the safety of Germany, which lies in the heart of the European Continent, is to be found in a unified land having a policy of non-alignment between two fiercely warring ideological camps—a policy for which the Social Democrats stand.

It is likely, however, that Russia's minatory tones of late had the effect just opposite to what was desired for, as the elections showed, it drove the West German people more into the arms of the Western powers than ever.

If there has been a setback for SEATO because of events in Thailand the West may draw consolation from the fact that NATO has been further strengthened by Dr. Adenauer's victory.

The Decision

It was known that once an anopheles mosquito acquired resistance to one of the widely used insecticides, it would within a few years develop resistance to the other most effective sprays.

IT WAS A RACE AGAINST TIME WHEN W.H.O. MADE ITS MEXICO CITY DECISION. EITHER THE DISEASE WOULD BE STAMPED OUT COMPLETELY IN THE FEW YEARS LEFT BEFORE THE MOSQUITOES BECAME IMMUNE TO THE INSECTICIDES, OR ALL THE EFFORTS OF THE PAST WOULD HAVE COME TO NOTHING.

The latest progress report is heartening, but the job is not done yet.

HURDLES IN THE WAY OF WELFARE STATE

THE Bombay symposium on the Concept of the Welfare State was an intellectual banquet.

It was sheer delight to be a witness to the feast of reason and flow of soul on a highly topical—and controversial—theme. It was clear that the five men well-known in the public life of India who participated in the symposium had all one common fear at the back of their minds that there was a price to be paid for the achievement of the Welfare State and that, all things considered, that price might be too heavy to pay.

Socialism, with the inevitable national planning it involves, is the means used to reach the goal of the Welfare State. That the Welfare State is a high ideal cannot be gainsaid, but the point is whether it can be achieved without the nation's regimentation and without sacrifice of democratic principles and practices which that regimentation entails.

The main problem of India, as Mr. B. Rama Rau said, is to provide the basic requirements of life to her teeming populations. Western standards cannot hold good for India, and there has to be fusion of large industrial interests with the needs of a village economy aiming at self-sufficiency.

Mr. A. D. Gorkhale emphasised the fact that a quarter of the country's population did not have even the barest minimum quantity of food. In a country where for many men their livelihood itself is at stake, the talk of a Welfare State may look high-falutin' and pitched in hollow tones, but those who mistake the path for the destination need to be reminded that India launched out in right earnest on national reconstruction hardly seven years ago.

There should be little reason, then, to look askance at the very concept of the Welfare State, for it will need time and a herculean effort to lift India from the economic morass in which she has been sunk for centuries.

It is not the ideal which is in question, but the time in which it can be realised and the means which are to be used for the purpose.

It may seem curious but it is true that the people who think that India has achieved little progress under planning are the very ones to say that the present pace of national development is too fast for the country's good.

That the country's tempo of planning activities is too high-strung is a fact, but if it has to conform to the country's available resources, there must be patience in the achievement of the goals.

One cannot have it both ways. Mr. K. M. Munshi dwelt on "the dividing line"—the difference of views on the means to be employed to attain the Welfare State. That, again, the speed of reconstruction work has largely determined the methods used for the purpose has to be more keenly and more widely realised.

If it is feared that socialism and planning involve concentration of economic power—and its concomitant, autocratic political power—it is because these things have to be done if one is in a desperate hurry or is overambitious for attaining the ends in a stipulated time.

If there is no hurry, there is no need for these rigidities to be developed. Socialism would lose much of its sting if the principle of "in-avoidability of gradualness" is accepted with all its implications.

Let India concentrate her main energies on three essentials, as Dr. C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar emphasised: public health, employment and education. Indeed, there can be no Welfare State worthy of its name without these three essentials being secured first and, conversely, once these essentials are obtained, the foundations will have been firmly laid for the erection of the Socialist edifice.

T.T.K.'s Tour

THE high hurdles in the way of reaching the goal of Welfare State have already made their appearance, but hope and buoyancy marked the departure from India this week of Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, Union Finance Minister, for the U.S. to explore the prospects of financial aid from that country.

India's needs for working the plan have become pressing and the Rs. 700-crore gap has to be bridged somehow.

Mr. Dulles' statement and the mooted emergency loan legislation in the U.S. are happy auguries for a substantial financial aid from that country.

It was in a challenging mood that Mr. Nehru wrote in the "Economic Review" published by the A.I.C.C. with regard to India's approach to foreign aid.

Any such help would be accepted with thanks, provided the terms were reasonable and no political strings were attached to it.

There is no reason to doubt that both these conditions will be amply fulfilled in any financial assistance that comes from the U.S.

If U.S. aid was unstintingly given at one time to a country like Yugoslavia whose ideological leanings were most suspect, it is unthinkable that India's case is not understood or appreciated in Washington.

India's present position may be precarious, but the basic factors that count for stability are more conspicuous in this country than any other that has needed financial accommodation for national reconstruction.

Civic Strike

The strike of civic workers in Bombay carried some salutary lessons with it both for the workers and those who advised and directed them to take the action.

The strike was sponsored by the Municipal Mazdoor Union and was actually an extension of the municipal hospital employees' strike.

The origin was paltry enough—the suspension of a cook in a local hospital for carrying on trade union activities inside the hospital premises.

The case could have been decided on its merits in any labour tribunal and hardly warranted a general abstention of work in a vital social service concerned with the health of the city.

That apart, the spread of the strike to civic workers showed the unthinking chain reaction one faulty and hasty initial step could entail.

If from insignificant beginnings, the work and activities of a big city are to be paralysed, labour leaders have to consider the ultimate disastrous effects of the moves they actuate on the workers themselves.

Bombay's civic strike proved once more that labour in India was too much under the sway of political parties.

The most unfortunate aspect of the strike was that divergence of policies between Dr. Lohia's Socialist Party and the P.S.P. and the rift in the P.S.P. itself on the issue of the strike mucked up the whole affair, so that the actual points in dispute were completely lost sight of, and a wave of impulse set up by conflicting political motives determined the course of events.

IT is hard to say why the food situation in West Bengal should be bad while fairly normal conditions prevail throughout the rest of the country.

The leftist parties claim that the food shortage is man-made and have set up a "Price Increase and Famine Resistance Committee" which has launched a campaign in the State for cheaper food and other essential commodities.

It may be that the shortage of food grains has been marginal and that anti-social activities have aggravated the problem.

The remedy evidently lies in requisitioning and organising supplies.

The West Bengal Governor has not failed to take active measures, and aid from the Centre and Orissa has been assured.

Quick movement of food grains—at times on a ship-to-mouth basis—has also been arranged.

Modified rationing and the licensing system are also calculated to make distribution evenly spread, especially in those areas where the scarcity is greatly felt.

No government could have done better.

The West Bengal Government, however, has to be constantly vigilant, for there are anti-social forces ready to undo the good work they are doing. These forces are to be found both among the traders and the political parties, who want to make capital out of a distressing situation.

"I never thought you liked birds!"

Rich in Bird Life

"London is an astonishing place for birds. Within 20 miles of St. Paul's cathedral no fewer than 245 species have been seen during the present century! and 110 species have been proved to have nested there. The great circle is rich in parks and in artificial lakes; and just because of the unique density of the human population there is a profusion of reservoirs of gravel-pits, of sewage-farms; and these make an unique concentration of places suitable for water-birds and wading birds."—K. SYRIA HAS AMBITIONS

WASHINGTON. LIKE a bar-room hangar-on that can't fight but loves to start mass trouble little Syria is spilling diplomatic apocryphs all over the Middle East.

Basically, Syria is a poor country with desert wasteland

RAMAYANA CARVINGS

PEOPLE'S MUSEUM IN SURAT

THE WINCHESTER MUSEUM AT SURAT IS A PEOPLE'S MUSEUM IN THE SENSE THAT IT WAS BROUGHT INTO EXISTENCE, BUILT UP, MAINTAINED AND BROUGHT TO ITS PRESENT LEVEL OF A MAJOR MUSEUM IN INDIA BY THE CITIZENS OF SURAT AND THEIR BOROUGH MUNICIPALITY.

It collections are housed in a modern new building, worth more than a lakh of rupees contributed by the citizens. The collections range over 9,000 articles, out of which nearly 6,000 were received as free gifts from the citizens of Surat and the rest purchased or obtained on loan.

Textile Wealth

The variety of exhibits is impressive. Its Textiles Section is as rich as any elsewhere in the country.

It includes pieces of Khadi, Dhaka's Malmal, Kinkhab or the royal cloth, Tanchhori, Mashru, Elachha, Khiradak, Gaji, Bandhini, Patola, Bangali, Ghadi, Chhayal, hand printed cloth; articles of jari (process depicting jari industries), embroidery and weaving; special types of embroidery work of Saurashtra, Kutch and Sind and beautiful hand-printed and old painted and woven Pichhaval, depicting various incidents from Indian mythology.

In another Section there are paintings of Rajput, Moghul, Kangra and Gujarat schools and a number of miniature Moghul paintings on ivory.

There is a whole range of hand-painted Kalpasutras (concerning Jain religion), clay models, terracotta, marble pieces, old stone idols and things made from agate and crystal glass.

Carvings

The rich collection of articles of metal work includes pots, old jars, vessels, lamp-stands, flower pots, dishes and also numerous other articles made from shells, beads and enamel.

Then there are a number of richly decorated chariots, hindolas, thrones and other pieces of furniture with superb carvings. Even a beautifully carved portion of an old Gujarati house has been displayed in the museum.

For those looking for sheer virtuosity in workmanship there are even paintings on rice grains and a variety of ivory and lacquer-painted playing cards.

Floating Stone

A Section having strong local interest consists of head-dresses and complete costumes (some embroidered) and ornaments of Gujarat including jamas, pichodi, khos and upvasira (upper garment), angarkha, kamarkha, saris, blouses, kabja, kanchil, fenta and embroidered shoes.

OLD SCRIPTS ON COPPER, PALM-LEAF MANUSCRIPTS, ALBUMS, AND HAND-PAINT-ED HOROSCOPES FORM ANOTHER BEAUTIFUL COLLECTION.

A curious item among the exhibits is a piece of stone which floats on water. Another exhibit shows different phases of the moon in natural agate stone.

The story of this citizens' museum dates from 1890 when it was founded and runs through 67 years of gradual building and collecting by the citizens of Surat and their Municipality.

It was started with the objective, as one of its founders, Shri Kalabhai Lalubhai, the then Chairman of the local School Board, said, "to collect and display those articles which would develop the inventive faculty of the children rather than a collection of curios to satisfy the visitor's eye."

Later the management of the museum took a wider view and decided on displaying arts and crafts of the city of Surat for the benefit of the citizens as well as outside visitors.

It continued functioning in a very modest way and up to 1940, the only functionary it had to look after its collections was just a watchman.

Expansion

After independence, however, expansion and improvement were very rapidly with more enthusiastic interest and participation on the part of citizens of Surat.

More staff was appointed, with an Honorary Curator in charge of the museum, and an advisory committee was set up to help him in purchasing worthwhile articles and to provide funds.

They Keep Trim For Queen's Visit

WASHINGTON. AT LAST, they found it—a diet that lets them lose weight and eat what they please, too!

The "they" are certain Washington wives who have been trying the "sour-sweet" method of calorie control.

The immediate incentive toward the sylph-like silhouette is the forthcoming visit of Queen Elizabeth of England in October.

Already official Washington is taking thought about what to wear to the parties now being planned in honour of Her Majesty.

That means, of course, getting rid of any waist-line bulges if those gorgeous dinner dresses are to fit properly.

First Trial

One wife here writes from Europe that she has just bought new formal gowns which she will wear to the three big dinners for the Queen.

BUT BEFORE HER TAKE-OFF FOR ROME AND FITTINGS WITH THE FAMOUS ITALIAN DRESS DESIGNER FONTANA, SHE TRIED OUT THE NEW DIET TO LOSE A FEW UNWANTED POUNDS.

This official wife with so much figure-conscious foresight is beautiful, blonde Ruth Buchanan, wife of the State Department's new Chief of Protocol, Wiley T. Buchanan, Jr.

Since the Protocol Chief is the man who will handle all details of the Queen's American visit—and the visits of all other incoming Heads of State—Mrs. Buchanan feels that it's part of her job to look her glamorous best at all times. At every party, she finds that women are talking diets.

Soon it was felt that the collection was too big to be accommodated in the old building which had been first acquired for the museum. Funds were collected. A new building worth over a lakh of rupees came up. The number of its collections went up to over 9,000 valuable articles.

Citizens of Surat are proud of this institution today—a living symbol of the historic city of Surat and a centre of arts, crafts and culture of Gujarat.

That's how it was at one of the luncheons in honour of the daughter of the Prime Minister of Pakistan.

Petite, five-foot, one-and-a-half inch Marylyn Kunkel, weighing 103 pounds, confided the secret of her school girl figure.

That's the secret which Ruth Buchanan was one of the first to try before going to Rome to buy those new evening clothes.

THIS IS THE DIET: FOR BREAKFAST DAILY, HAVE NOTHING BUT THE JUICE OF ONE LEMON MIXED WITH ONE TABLESPOON OF HONEY, ONE PIECE OF DRY TOAST, BLACK COFFEE. EAT WHAT YOU PLEASE THE REST OF THE DAY.

She must know what she's doing since she says this lemon juice and honey business did the trick for her during the two years her husband, an Air Force colonel was stationed in Pakistan.

From Paris Where did she hear of this? From her mother, she says, who picked it up years ago when she was a dress designer in Paris.

Mrs. Ernestine Plant now of California got this method of weight control from the French rannequins who model clothes for Parisian dressmakers. What's the reason it works? Mrs. Kunkel doesn't seem to know.

But we think we do. For a week now, we ourselves have been ruining the start of each bright new day by downing that quart of lemon juice mixed with honey. We have lost weight but we've lost something else, too. That's our appetite for the rest of the day!

No Push-Button War

future—will it go in more and more for nuclear powered ships?

A: It will be tremendous and it will be getting better and better. Right now it's expensive, and we don't know everything there is to know about it either. "It's still not something that you put anybody on unless he is very well trained and has great advantages, but it is expensive. What we have got to do and what we are trying to do all the time is to evaluate how much it costs and what the country gets for its money."

Huge Cost

"Now, unfortunately, we don't know exactly what we are going to get out of it until we have experience of it. We don't know all the advantages it will have or what the difficulties will be. So we are trying to take it on a conservative programme basis—but not too conservative—so that we can see where we are going. Keep making progress but not necessarily at tremendous cost. We want to reduce costs."

"We want to increase the flexibility of nuclear power ships."

By that I mean we want to reduce the shielding, make the power plants smaller and have less equipment. We will be able to do that in time. Above all we want to reduce the cost."

Q: You speak frequently of the cost?

A: "One of the things that worries me a great deal and worries all of us is the increasing cost of things. It's getting terrific—the cost of airplanes, the cost of missiles, the cost of ships, the cost of electronic equipment, the cost of weapons, the cost of everything is great."

Q: Why is the cost so great?

A: "Largely, that cost is due to the complexity of the machinery. An airplane now has literally millions of parts in it. The ship is just loaded, with electronic gear, and electronic gear itself is much more complicated now."

"Radars, sonars and weapons are all complicated. Partly, it's due to the rise in prices, but that is general throughout the whole country. Partly, it is due to the natural desire of the people who do the designing to want to get the very best equipment, and to do that you pay for it.

"We are trying to get the very best equipment, but if we can get something that will serve the purpose and be very cheap, we will do that. We are very conscious of costs all the way through. No matter what anyone can do about it, we are, essentially, on a level budget—the whole Department of Defense."

Therefore if you require a certain number of things, the you have to get the costs of individual things down. Yet you have got to have a certain number of ships, aircraft and weapons. How we can get the cost down is something that has us concerned. Because you can be destroyed as much through economic difficulties as you can by devastation of war."

"Sometimes economic collapse does more permanent damage because it damages you inside. Sometimes nations recover from a war—although the next one they might not."

"WHEN PEOPLE START LOSING FAITH IN THEIR OWN GOVERNMENT—AS THEY WOULD THROUGH ECONOMIC DIFFICULTY—YOU ARE IN FOR REAL TROUBLE."

"A good sound economy is just as important to the national security as military hardware—in some ways, more important."

Q: Recently there has been talk about the need of greater unification of our armed forces, particularly of the necessity of putting everybody in one uniform. What is your reaction to such a proposal?

Competition

A: "I'm not in favour of it, because it won't work. What would be the object of such a thing? Would it be more economy? Well, fundamentally, the proponents of that feel that some tasks could be eliminated."

"What tasks would they eliminate? They would, of course, eliminate the tasks done by people other than the proponents of the single uniform. As the Secretary of Defense said, bigness in itself doesn't cure anything, and there are a lot of evils of bigness that are very bad—evils that come with just being too big.

"In the first place, the head of such an organization will not know all the things that he should know, so he will have to rely upon a staff. He has to set up professional advisers who will give advice freely—but they will not be accountable for the consequences of their advice."

"If their advice is good, he does well. If their advice is not good, he doesn't do well. Now how do these advisers get their advice?"

"They get their advice from the people who are responsible for the operations—and the operators are a long way off. Thus it is liable to be a yes-man organization eventually, whether the head man wants it that way or not. That is one part of it."

"One thing you have to keep in mind is that competition is important. One of the reasons that our missiles in the Navy are good missiles is because we have competition within the Navy itself. We have competition between the Bureau of Ordnance and the Bureau of Aeronautics, and occasionally a senior officer in the Navy makes some attempt to eliminate the competition between the Bureau of Ordnance and the Bureau of Aeronautics."

"Sometimes it does get a little strange. Well, maybe that has something to do with the reason the Navy has good missiles today. Now, one thing that we have insisted upon is that everything one of these bureau does the other one knows about. Nothing must be held back."

"When the Bureau of Aeronautics develops a missile, the Bureau of Ordnance works very hard to make sure that its missile is also very good. This has resulted in all the Navy missiles being pretty doggone good missiles today."

"We don't have the trouble with our operating missiles that other people seem to have. And the reason, I think, is partially due to this competition."

"Economy, efficiency and progress—all depend upon competition—competition within each service—as well as competition of viewpoint and method among services. It is the lifeblood of our military effectiveness."

Nana Blazed New Trail

NANA. By Emile Zola. Published by Jacco Publishing House, 125 Mahatma Gandhi Road, Bombay, 1. Pages 348. Price Rs. 2.

EMILE ZOLA'S world famous novel, Nana, dynamited the rapid, idealistic, romantic literature which had become established in Europe and established a new era of literary realism.

By its shocking adherence to truth and its unfolding of the life of immorality and vice which was so normal among the upper classes of France and which now threatened to engulf the whole of Europe, it focused attention on the fundamental realities of life.

Nana is pre-eminently a piece of literature. It is true that by eschewing that hypocrisy so characteristic of the literature of the time, Emile Zola's Nana established a new tradition.

But, it is still primarily a grand piece of literature. The overwhelming impression throughout the novel is one of power and strength.

It is characteristic of this power and strength that Emile Zola should have chosen as the central character of his novel a prostitute—a woman of a debased profession whose adherence to it flowed rather from her own character than the force of circumstances.

All around her, the men of a decadent Europe fell a prey to her devastation and animality. By virtue of her command over their senses, Nana rose to the pinnacle of power.

The richest and most eminent of men proved eager to offer themselves and their fortunes at the altar of her embraces.

She squeezed them dry and threw them aside for others, who were only too eager to join the ranks of those who had enjoyed her favours.

Nana rose to a pinnacle of power in this way. From that pinnacle, she fell; her fall was the greater in view of the height to which she had risen.

That fall is shown with a supreme mastery that makes the concluding portions of the novel rise to supreme heights of literature.

Nana is a masterpiece. It is the greatest of the great French realistic works. It will continue to find a wide readership all over the world as long as human interest in human frailties remains what it is.

Quaint Farmhouse Attracts R.L. Stevenson Fans

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON, the Scottish novelist, essayist, and poet, is best known in India for his "Treasure Island," "Kidnapped," "A Child's Garden of Verses," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and several other books.

Indian cinema lovers have seen several of these on the screen.

Although he is a classic author also in the U.S.A., few Americans have seen the red-roofed white house in Saranac Lake, New York state, in which Stevenson lived just seventy years ago.

Now owned by the little Adirondack mountain resort community, this structure houses the largest collection of person-that occupation, but shifted his interests to letters and literature, particularly style.

R.L.S., as he was known all his life, began writing essays for the "Cornhill" and other magazines, and then published travel books.

Of this experience he wrote: "I was walking in the veranda of a small house outside the hamlet of Saranac. It was winter, the night was very dark, the air clear and cold and sweet with the purity of forests. For the making of a story here

The cottage in Saranac Lake, N.Y., which Robert Louis Stevenson, the Scottish author, occupied just 70 years ago. It has become a shrine to the novelist and poet.

By Ronald E. Wolseley

Rambling House

On a recent motor trip from Canada back to the U.S., I came upon this rambling house set back into the town so that only the most patient drivers can find it.

A quaint farmhouse—it was to this place that Stevenson came from Bournemouth, England, to live into the winter of 1887-1888.

Stevenson's life, will be remembered as somewhat tragic. Born in Edinburgh in 1850, he lived only 44 years.

His full name was Robert Louis Balfour Stevenson.

SICKLY ALL HIS LIFE, HE CONTRACTED A FEVER WHEN HE WAS ONLY EIGHT.

Descended from a family of distinguished Scottish civil engineers, he began studies for

He came to the U.S. for the first time in 1879 as a stowaway passenger on a trans-Atlantic liner, then took an immigrant train across the continent to San Francisco, where he had arranged to meet the woman who soon became his wife.

They went to a mining camp but shortly returned to Scotland, where he wrote some of his most famous books, those already mentioned as well as "The Merry Men," "The Black Arrow," "New Arabian Nights," and "Virginibus Puerisque."

But his health continued to be bad, so that when he heard from friends that mountainous Saranac Lake, in northern New York not far from the Canadian border, was salubrious for the sick, Stevenson returned to the American continent with his wife, mother, and stepson.

They settled in the farmhouse still preserved in his honour.

There he wrote "The Master of Ballantrae."

were fine conditions. "Come," said I to my engine, "let us make a tale."

He also composed "The Lantern Bearer," "Pulvis et Umbra," and other pieces here.

Off To Samoa

From Saranac, in 1888, he set forth on what was to be a voluntary exile to Samoa, in the South Sea Islands. He remained in the part of the world until his death in 1894.

The old cottage at Saranac, although hard to find today, is easy to see, once one has arrived at it over winding roads.

In this it is somewhat unlike the homes of other historic authors, which often are barricaded by commercialism.

The Stevenson house charges about a rupee for admission of adults; children see it without cost.

This charge is needed for upkeep. One may roam at will and a well-informed curator is gracious and helpful.

One knows that it would take several days, actually, to examine and read carefully the many books, magazine, pictures, letters, furniture, paintings, busts, and various personal traces of the poet novelist.

STEVENSON'S SMOKING JACKET IS THERE, WITH A SPRIG OF HEATHER STILL IN ITS BREAST POCKET. ARE THE ICE SKATES HE WORE WHILE SPEEDING ACROSS MOODY LAKE. NOT FAR OFF.

Here also are his yachting cap, a lock of his hair, scores of original photographs, copies of Youth's Companion, "McClure's" and other now extinct papers and magazines that published his work.

The curator shows visitors the spots on the mantelpiece over the fire place where the author absent-mindedly left his cigarettes until they burned out.

The furniture, including a short-seated favourite chair, is just as used seven decades ago.

Mrs. Stevenson once told a friend, while visiting at Saranac, that she and her husband were "high up in the Adirondack Mountains living in a guide's cottage in the most primitive fashion. The maid does the cooking (we have little beyond venison and bread to cook) and the boy comes every morning to carry water from a distant spring for drinking purposes."

Scene Changes

The Stevensons would find life much easier, physically speaking, today. But it hardly would be conducive to reflective writing, for Saranac Lake has become a crowded and popular mountain resort principally for people from the rest of the state and Canada, although we notice motor car licence plates from many parts of the union.

Moody Lake, Lake Flower, and the Saranac River are dotted with sailboats, speedboats, row boats, and other small vessels.

Motels, hotels, and other eating and resting places line the highways near the town and in the village itself are rows of houses which let rooms to tourists. The literary memories of R.L.S. are lost, now, in the racket of speedboat and motor car engines.

Child Writing Fascinates

CHILD WRITING. Published by the Ministry of Education, Government of India, New Delhi.

IT WAS in 1951 that Shankar of Shankar's Weekly fame conceived the idea of bringing out a special number devoted exclusively to the literary and artistic products of children all over the world.

The number that he brought out in 1951 had an immediate and overwhelming success and successive annuals repeated that success to indicate clearly how useful and exciting these numbers were being found by intelligent people everywhere.

Having already brought together selections from these special numbers between 1951 and 1955 in a volume of Child Art, the Ministry of Education of the Government of India has now published the present selection of children's writings.

The writings, K. G. Salydain points out, "introduce us to a fascinating world—the world of children."

This fascinating world indicates also, however, a remarkable range of talent.

Though the writings reproduced here lack polish and refinement they undoubtedly bear the stamp of creativeness which mark them out as worth preserving.

These selections also reflect the intense sincerity of which evidently only children are capable.

There is also a peculiar quality of imagination by which the hard and fast distinctions which adults usually make between fact and fancy disappear entirely to be replaced by an intense awareness of an artistic unity.

The children, whose writings are included here, range in age from five to fifteen.

This provides an opportunity to the reader to examine how growth influences the imagination and forces it into a mould of awareness of reality.

It is not of course surprising that one is affected by nostalgia in seeing these childhood qualities and is somewhat sorry to see the transformation to adulthood with all that it means.

For all these reasons, and many more, it is a fascinating book.

Charlie Chaplin Starts Work On His Memoirs

CHARLES CHAPLIN sends word from the Riviera that he's starting work on his memoirs — 300,000 words to be finished in three years.

Says the little man "so many wrong things are said about me that I'm going to put them right. I'm just a spiritual anarchist."

THE BOSS (1)

"Come on round and meet the boss," said a buddy of ours in the Television business the other day. So we did, and what did we find? Why, a beautiful blonde.

She's a super-chic Parisienne named Nicole Millinaire and she's currently shooting a series of 26 films destined for American video screens this winter under the title "Dick and the Duchess."

Our Paris Diary

Nicole, a member of a rich aristocratic French family, got into television in an unusual way.

Eight years ago a plane in which she was a passenger crashed outside Stockholm and she caught influenza after walking two miles through snow-drifts to safety.

Convincing, she was taken to see a film studio, liked it and decided to set up as an independent producer in Paris.

Here's her recipe for success: "It's like being in the shoe-making business," she explains. "If you're a manufacturer, you design a pair of shoes, polish them really well, then send them to a distributor in New York. If he likes them he'll place a big order and you're in the money. It's as simple as that."

Now he's built his fleet up to six and carries over 600,000 passengers a year.

Soon his pride and joy will take the water—a dol. 300,000 river liner, equipped with sleeping cabins, restaurants and cinema, destined to carry vacationers on a leisurely two-day cruise from Paris to Le Havre and back for an all-in ticket charge of dol. 45.

THE BOSS (2)

One of the "musts" for people on vacation in Paris is a trip up the Seine in a "Bateau Mouche"—one of those smart river steamers.

But they're probably never noticed the cheery, sweating man on the quayside who works in shabby jeans, pulling on ropes, taking tickets and generally making himself useful. He's wartime paratrooper Jean Bruel and the man the French papers like to call the "Onassis of the Seine."

Jean came out of the French army in 1946 and sank every centime of his savings in a gamble. "The Seine," he argued, "is the heart of Paris. But people only see it from the quayside."

So he bought himself an old-fashioned river boat, installed a bar, an orchestra and plenty of bright lights and formed the oddly named "Company for Archaic Means of Transport," with moonlight cruises up and down the river.

Now he's built his fleet up to six and carries over 600,000 passengers a year.

Soon his pride and joy will take the water—a dol. 300,000 river liner, equipped with sleeping cabins, restaurants and cinema, destined to carry vacationers on a leisurely two-day cruise from Paris to Le Havre and back for an all-in ticket charge of dol. 45.

Dropped in overnight at a small tourist hotel this week. On the wall was a notice in English. This, honest—is what it said:

"Make an appointment for a bath with the room-maid."

Slang-Users Are Changing Our Future Language

CHICAGO. THESE cats, daddy-o, are way out on verbage, and you'll only bug the tats playing it cool, very cool, say the Glotchronologists.

In somewhat different language, this is the word from representatives of the Chicago Natural History Museum.

Their pronouncement is that the slang-users of today are shaping the language of tomorrow, and that it is unrealistic to resist.

As for Glotchronology, this is a new scientific tool which puts language to use on such problems as determining how long Indian tribes have been in the south-western U.S.

Dr. Paul S. Martin, the Museum's Chief Curator of Anthropology compares the science with using geological means to determine the age of rock or the counting of tree-rings to find out how old the tree is.

CHANGE RATE

By figuring out a standardised rate of change, anthropologists believe they have a new tool for nailing antiquity down to dates.

EXPERIMENTS INDICATE THAT ABOUT 15 PER CENT OF A LANGUAGE "DRIFTS" EVERY 1,000 YEARS.

Dr. Morris Swadesh, originator of "Glotchronology" or "lexical dating" established the scale in detailed comparisons of today's English and the language of Chaucer's time that causes trouble to so many high school and college students in attempting The Canterbury Tales.

The drift is involved in most Indo-European languages, including English and the Germanic languages stemming from Celtic, Greek, Armenian, Slavic and Baltic tongues, and it encompasses changed case endings and word orders.

Except for "fossilised" language, such as church Latin, Dr. Martin explains, "languages are always changing. Each generation assimilates the current 'pop talk' but is powerless to halt slang's drift into the common tongue."

YOU BE THE JUDGE

Here are three typical illustrations based on well-known cases.

The average intelligent man should be able to arrive at a reasonably just verdict. Weigh the arguments of both sides and pass judgment.

Decisions given by courts are at the end.

MANGOOMAL FELT HIMSELF A MINISTER AS SOON AS HIS FRIEND MEHTA WAS SWORN IN FOR THAT OFFICE.

He saw great opportunities in the future.

True it was. People flocked to him for favours and more favours. He went on dispensing contracts, jobs, permits, to all those for whom he cared—and he cared for only those who paid him well.

He felt that the Government itself was in his pocket.

That is why he did not refuse an offer of Rs. 1,000 from Mr. Nowkar, for securing a Government job.

A written contract was entered into in clear terms that Mr. Nowkar should pay Rs. 1,000 as soon as he got the job.

Mangoomal's influence did not fail. He secured a job for Nowkar. Only Mr. Nowkar refused to pay the amount.

Result: Mangoomal filed a suit for Rs. 1,000.

Nowkar said: "My Lord! I am not going to pay the amount."

the columns of the "Times" that Murthy's connection with the paper had ceased and he was not authorised to represent the "Times."

"Any body dealing with him would do so at his own risk."

The notice had a telling effect on Murthy's reputation. Every one started to look on Murthy with suspicion.

Murthy felt that the notice was published only in order to defame him. He brought an action against the "Times" for defamation.

He told the court: "My Lord! 'Times' had no business to put in such notice. They have done it deliberately in order to defame me. They must pay for their action."

"Times" replied: "Your Lordship! We are sorry for any inconvenience caused to him on account of the announcement. But we had to do this in our own interest."

"We feel that we have the privilege to make such an announcement in our own interests."

Mangoomal on his part argued to the point:

"A court cannot look into the morals of all the contracts. It has only to see whether the terms have been fulfilled or not. That is all."

"If the answer is yes, then it should enforce such contracts."

W.A. GUNN-A LIFE SKETCH

U.S. National Senior Singles Champion once, national doubles champion five times, William Alexander Gunn, who will be leading the U.S. Table Tennis team in their Indian tour, was first nominated captain of his country in 1940 when the U.S. Table Tennis team toured Japan.

Chemical Engineer by training, Bill Gunn is today President of Gunn Bros. Oil Co. Inc., a firm dealing in fuel oil and oil burner sales and service, with an annual salary of 15,000 dollars.

An all round sportsman, Bill Gunn is actively interested in such wide forms of sports and games as Table Tennis, Baseball, Fishing, Swimming and Motor Boating.

Bill Gunn, besides being an active table-tennis player is one of the leading personalities of the U.S. Table Tennis Association and the International T.T. Federation.

Vice-President of the U.S. Table Tennis Association from 1939-43, Bill Gunn, serves on the advisory committee and development committee of the International T.T. Federation. Today he is also chairman of the U.S. T.T. Association selection committee.

William Alexander Gunn has travelled extensively, 1940 in Japan as playing captain of the U.S. Table Tennis team, 1931 in Austria and Southern Germany as joint captain, 1952 at Olympic Games Helsinki, 1954 at the Wembley World T.T. Championships, 1955 at the Utrecht World Championships, 1956 in Japan and Korea as captain, 1957 at Stockholm World Championships as the U.S. Captain.

Besides, he has toured France, Germany, Switzerland, Ireland, Scotland, England, Holland, Belgium, France, Denmark and Southern Germany.

William Alexander Gunn is deeply interested in youth welfare and has been in charge of Mammonk Baseball programme for boys between 8 to 16 years. He has been superintendent of operation of five separate leagues mostly interested in Boy's recreation programme in table-tennis, baseball, and basket ball.

DAVE Power, Australia's master of cross-country athletics, brilliantly won the 100,000 metres challenge match between New South Wales and New Zealand at Sydney's Centennial Park on August 31.

Power, triple Australian cross-country champion, beat New Zealand stars Murray Halberg and Kerry Williams. His time was 32 minutes 27.2 seconds.

But New Zealand took the team honours, beating New South Wales by 16 points to 20. New Zealand runners came in second, third, fifth and sixth.

Power looked the winner all the way. He excelled in the sandy sections and over the fences.

GIRL CHAMPION STARTS TRAINING

Olympic triple gold medalist Betty Cuthbert of Sydney opened her training programme on August 28 in preparation for the approaching Australian season and the British Empire Games in Cardiff (Wales) next year.

Mrs. June Ferguson, who coached Betty to world honours, has planned a tough schedule for the star. "I am determined to correct faults in Betty's arm and body leaning," Mrs. Ferguson said. "She will be faster than ever if her arm action can be improved. Her body angle in races can be improved to give her more drive."

Betty has left Sydney's Western Suburbs Club to join a new club—Cumberland—formed in her own district. This means that she will now be a rival of her former clubmate Marlene Mathews, who ran third to Betty in the 100 and 200 metres at the 1956 Olympic Games.

Marlene also started her training on August 28 for the Australian season and Empire Games.

"Betty and I have worked hard at physical exercises through the winter. This has helped to keep our weight down. Though I feel almost fit enough to race now, I won't do any fast work for several weeks," Marlene said.

Marlene has not competed in athletics since falling on the finishing line in the New South Wales 200 yards championship earlier this year. She injured her leg in the fall, but a long spell from athletics following her marriage has cleared up the trouble.

MELBOURNE PLANS INDOOR TRACK

The Victorian Amateur Athletic Association hopes to have an indoor track at Albert Park, Melbourne, within two years. It will probably obtain the use of a 40,000 sq. ft. clear-span building in the park.

After leaving provision for 3,000 spectators the Association plans to build a narrow circular track of about seven laps to the mile with a straight of from 80 to 70 yards.

If an extension could be made for a special run-off, the straight would be extended to between 80 and 90 yards.

Athletic officials will ask American amateur officials for plans of lay-outs of small indoor tracks.

BRITISH RUNNER MAY TURN PROFESSIONAL

A former British three-mile champion and present record holder, who is now working in Melbourne, is interested in running professionally.

What Tour de France Cycle Race Means To Frenchmen

PARIS, September 16. FRANCE is enjoying her favourite hot-weather diversion—the Tour de France bicycle race. The "month of madness" run annually infects France and much of Europe and Latin America.

For the next few weeks train schedules will be changed to keep crossings open while the cyclists pass. Police will keep roads cleared for hours for the processions.

Even churches will change hours so services don't conflict with the hours of the passing caravan.

Cafe owners post hourly results or lose their clients, event important enough to take French men can think of no "Le Tour" of newspaper front pages.

HUCKSTERS AND NOISE

The 120 entrants, known as "giants of the road," face 4,685 kilometers (2,916 miles) of varying routes during the 24-day race.

The miles-long caravan usually draws some 15 million spectators as it wanders around France. Scores of advertising cars and blaring loudspeaker trucks go along, scattering millions of leaflets. Traffic jams are created that are classics for France.

This year's tour promises to be one of the liveliest in years.

NO PREDICTIONS

Experts hesitate to make any predictions this year after they almost unanimously agreed last year that Charley Gaul of Luxembourg would win. In fact, little-known Roger Walkowiak of France won. Both are back this year.

Salute To The Wicket-Keeper

It is strange that in the great number of books dealing with so many aspects of cricket that have rolled off the presses over the years, there has not been one devoted to the history of wicket-keepers and wicket-keeping.

Happily, that omission has been most adequately repaired by G. D. Martineau, one of the game's leading historians, in his book just published, "VALIANT STUMPER".

It covers more than 200 years in the development of the art of the man behind the stumps, starting in 1744, in which year came the earliest account of a wicket-keeper stumping a man out.

The book presents some fascinating stories of the early days of cricket. There is the one about the projected visit of an English team to France, led by

THE RACE IS DIVIDED INTO 22 LEGS, INCLUDING TWO DAYS IN WHICH THE COURSE IS IN 300-KILOMETER (188-MILE) RANGE.

It circles France clockwise, dips into Belgium and Spain, and ends in Paris July 20.

The prizes donated by various firms amount to 45,185,000 francs ($122,000). The race began June 27 at Nantes.

Surrey wicket-keeper William Yalden, in 1789. With the team ready to embark at Dover, the tour was cancelled owing to the outbreak of the French Revolution.

Mr. Martineau tells us how wicket-keepers adapted themselves to two later, and more peaceful, revolutions—the introduction of round-arm bowling in the 1830s, and then of the high-arm action in 1884. As the story unfolds to the present day, it is evident that the position behind the wicket has never been a sinecure any more for a wicket-keeper, unpadded and ungloved, taking the underhand shot on a bumpy pitch in the early days than for his counterpart today, on whom the new bowling and batting techniques make much greater demands.

The book deals with the outstanding characteristics of famous wicket-keepers in English and overseas cricket, and includes in its survey that most accomplished of women wicket-keepers, Miss Betty Snowball, who received batting coaching from Leerie Constantine when he was playing for Burnley, in the Lancashire League, in 1930.

WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

BY HOWARD SCHENKEN AND RICHARD L. FREY

Responding to partner's double of a pre-emptive opening three-bid requires considerable exercise of good judgment.

As most players use this double, it is primarily for a takeout, but usually includes sufficient high-card strength so that the responder has the option of letting the double stand and playing for penalties if that seems to be the best chance for a profit.

With both sides vulnerable.

ANSWERS

(a) FOUR CLUBS. This is a terrible hand with which to have to bid at the four level, but the chances are that the opponents will make three spades doubled for a game and there is at least some hope that you will be set less than 500. You simply cannot decide unilaterally that the "give-up" pass will cost the least.

(b) PASS. With this hand you can hope to win a couple of defensive tricks with cards that will almost certainly be useless if your side plays the hand.

(c) THREE NO-TRUMP. Although there is a good likelihood that you will get the opponents 500 points at three hearts, it is much more likely that you will make a game at no-trump.

(d) FOUR HEARTS. You announce that you have excellent support for any suit partner may bid, as well as a good hand in high cards.

(e) THREE SPADES. Partner's takeout double asks you to bid the other major if possible. If partner has a minimum, three spades should be safer than four clubs; if he has a powerful hand you may be able to make four spades.

(f) FOUR SPADES. You must distinguish between a possible bust take-out and this hand with its strong five-card suit and eight points in high cards. Partner might pass a mere three-spade bid.

HOCKEY MAYBE OUT OF OLYMPICS VERY SOON

LONDON, September 20. WHEN the international Olympic Committee meet in Sofia next week, some sensational changes are likely to be proposed for the programme of the 1960 Olympics in Rome.

Team sports such as association football and basketball are almost certain to be declared out. Hockey, too, may be abolished as well as the cycling events.

"The Times" points out today only a certain number of sports are compulsory at the games—athletics, gymnastics, combat sports, swimming and equestrian events and the pentathlon. "And the others have climbed on the band-wagon."

Another point made by the newspaper is that the programme of the games has become "more and more overloaded."

"So many arenas have to be prepared at present and so much accommodation for officials and competitors provided, that the financial burden of acting as host has become almost intolerable for small countries."—N.A.F.E.N.

Until June this year, officials and players were banned from taking part in pools under Football Association regulations.

Anyone found participating would have been automatically banned from the game.

Since then, the Association allowed those connected with the game to take part in pools which have been authorised and registered.—N.A.F.E.N.

Footballer Wins Football Pool!

LONDON, Sept. 20. JOE SIBLEY, former Newcastle player, has won more than £9,000 in a football pool—the first professional footballer to have obtained a pools prize.

Anyone found participating would have been automatically banned from the game.

Since then, the Association allowed those connected with the game to take part in pools which have been authorised and registered.—N.A.F.E.N.

year medical student at Adelaide University.

Narinder's inspired captaincy and brilliant play led his team to three straight victories and put it in a good position to win the competition. But it finished in second place after the powerful Sydney University team.

Narinder went to Adelaide to study in 1952. When he completes his degree course he hopes to spend a year in a big Adelaide hospital before returning home to Malaya to practice.

When asked why Indians seemed to make the best hockey players, Narinder said: "I believe the answer to that lies in the Indians' approach to the game. They put more thought into it. They never go chasing the ball madly. Each player concentrates on his opponent, his own area of play and his own tactics."

HOCKEY TEAM INVITED TO HOLLAND

Australia has received an invitation to compete in an international hockey tournament in Holland in September next year. The tournament will take place in Amsterdam to celebrate the 60th anniversary of the Royal Netherlands Hockey Association.

The secretary of the Sydney Hockey Association, Mr. Laurie Purnell, said on August 30 that it would cost £10,000 to send a team to Holland. "The Australian Hockey Association is at present budgeting for an estimated £14,000 to send a team to the 1960 Rome Olympic Games," he added.

The president of the International Hockey Federation, Mr. L. J. Quarles van Ufford, has offered to manage an Australian team on a European tour after the tournament.

Mr. van Ufford is also secretary of the Royal Netherlands Hockey Association.

ARE all six beach umbrellas shown above alike in details of design? This may be your impression at first glance, but closer inspection will change your mind. Actually, there are in the group five dissimilar designs. This means, of course, that one pattern is duplicated, a condition that poses the obvious question—Which two umbrellas are twins?

THIS TAKES SQUARING

CUT out the square above and the four triangles at right and below. Paste the pieces to thin cardboard or heavy paper and then see how quickly you can arrange them to form a perfect square. A solution appears elsewhere in the page, if you need it.

Those who are planning a party or family get-together will find this a good stunt for keeping guests amused at the table, while waiting for dessert, etc. Of course, a contest to see who can solve the problem fastest is always fun, in which case it is suggested that host or hostess provide sufficient sets of pieces to go around. A maximum of ten minutes should be sufficient time.

Coffee Break Question generosity, "the way I have them arranged in the field, if I take up any of them I'll spoil the design, but if you'll show me how to plant ten of the plants so that I'll still have five rows of four plants each, I'll sell you the other ten at cost."

Snick did some quick thinking, and he soon came up with a sketch showing how the required arrangement could be made. Snick's original planting is shown above.

How did Snick make the changeover to win the plants at cost?

Eddie Choong Indisposed...

DHONGADE SHOCKS DENMARK'S HANSEN

CHRONICLE BADMINTON CORRESPONDENT

DISAPPOINTMENT was in store for the large crowd in the Western India Cricket Club of India Open Badminton Championships at the Bombay Gymkhana this evening. Those who had specially come to see the one and only Eddie Choong, the great little Malayan, who has the distinction of joining Sir George Thomas and Wong Peng Soon in winning the All-England singles event four times and who has a little further to go to gain the numerical record of six still held by the Irishman, Frank Devlin, the proud father of Judy and Susan, both of whom helped America win the first-ever Uber Cup, was unable to take the court against J. D. Kamath because of indisposition.

The Committee deserve a big pat on their back for announcing Choong's inability on a board at the main entrance. The Malayan suddenly got a temperature this afternoon.

No effort has been spared to get him into condition. The match with Kamath has been postponed and it is most probable that he will be dissuaded from playing the mixed doubles with Miss Nalini Uplekar who will pair with T. N. Seth.

The next disappointment came when Denmark's unpredictable No. 4, Hammergaard Hansen, seeded No. 5, bowed down in three games to Datu Dhongade by 5-15, 15-12, 12-15 in forty minutes.

There was no getting away from the fact that Dhongade's success was a thoroughly deserved one. His main weapon of success was the smash which he hit with time and again and the Dane flat-footed.

IMPRESSIVE GAME Besides, his smash was accurate, reliable and varied and what was of most importance it was used with discretion and hit with brain.

Hansen, on the other hand, also profited both by the dis-

In banking the first game at 15-5, the Bombay player was never headed and when he led 4-0 and 8-6 a straight-game victory seemed imminent.

But Hansen put his heart and soul into the game and with offensive lobs and an occasional close-up drop went to level the game scores.

The score was evened at 12 but down 12-13, Hansen smashed with all his might. The stroke carried no direction and had him off-balance. Dhongade got his racket to the shuttle which dropped just over the net.

Hansen was demoralised and so BOMBAY, Saturday. College Miss Pushpalata Malvankar had earlier caused a start-ling upset when she got the better of Miss Farida Baig of Hyderabad in three games, the downfall of the visitor being her lack of physical resources.

Another World Title Retained...

ARCHIE MOORE KOs TONY ANTHONY

LOS ANGELES, September 21. WORLD light-heavyweight champion Archie Moore brilliantly retained his title on Friday night by knocking out challenger Tony Anthony in the seventh round of their scheduled 15-round title bout in the Los Angeles Olympic Auditorium.

Archie Moore, weighed in at the maximum weight, at the first weight-in, Moore weighed a little over the category limit, but he came back again an hour later to weigh 175 pounds (79.3 kilos), which is the light-heavy limit.

Anthony weighed in at 172 pounds (78 kilos). Anthony had been favourite for the title bout up to the weigh-in, but when Moore tipped the scales at exactly the maximum weight allowed, the champion regained favouritism at 8/5.

Moore, who is 45 and appeared anxious before the ceremony and admitted he had lost 37 pounds (about 17 kilos) in the last two months by following a special diet, which he keeps a secret.—UPI-APF.

Rangoonwalla Wins Interesting Tie

BOMBAY, Saturday. A RANGOONWALLA will remember for many a year to come, his scrupulous performance against P. S. Talwar, whom he beat by two games to one in the semi-final round of the Juniors' Singles, in the Byculla Y. M. C. A. Table Tennis Championships, at the Y.M.C.A. hall, this evening.

Rangoonwalla, an erratic and unpredictable player, lost the first game, due to sheer rashness, at 18-21.

In the second, Rangoonwalla's dash came to his aid, and he virtually swept Talwar off the table, to win comfortably by 21-10.

But, the final game was Rangoonwalla's most memorable one for being down 2-10, 8-15 and 11-18, superbly recovered by attacking throughout, to draw level at 20-20.

The cheering crowd now waited with bated breath to see if Rangoonwalla could pull the match round, which he did, hitting the two points to win at 22-20.

On Wednesday he meets K. G. S. Moorthy in the final; the latter beat T. R. Khodajli today 21-18, 21-15, in the other semi-final round.

In the final of the Juniors' Doubles, his erratic play caused his downfall for Rangoonwalla in partnership with R. R. Kamath, lost to M. Shah and F. R. Khodajli, who won by 18-21, 21-18, 21-16.

In another interesting match, Miss Vatsala Naik easily beat Miss Doreen Augusto by straight two, in the semi-final round of the women's singles.

She now meets Miss Sudha Bhagwat in final on Wednesday.

In the final of the women's doubles, Vatsala in partnership with Miss Prisca Nunes, lost to Miss Joy D'Souza and Miss Veena Devan, who won in straight games.

It was Veena's great play, more or less on par with her illustrious brother, Gautam, National champion, that really paved the way to victory.

JUNIORS' SINGLES
Semifinals: K. G. S. Moorthy beat P. R. Khodajli 21-18; 21-15.

Zonal Soccer Starts
GOA OUTCLASS KARNATAK 7-0

Neville D'Souza's Hat-Trick

BOMBAY, Saturday. THE Zonal soccer tournament commenced at the Cooperate on Saturday evening with a bang—one, two, three four, five six and seven goals to nil—by Goans against Karnataka. The feature of the match being a hat-trick by Neville D'Souza.

The winners now await the result of the Bombay-Gujarat tie. This will be the semi-final round.

Goa completely outplayed Karnataka, especially with their speed and clever passing. Joe D'Sa and Neville D'Souza showing perfect understanding in their approach work.

Karnatak were lethargic and missed the few chances that came their way. Bankara and Nagraj being particularly to blame.

Neville D'Souza scored the side's only goal in the first half in the tenth minute off a pass from A. Collaco, the left-winger. Early on resumption, in the fifth minute, Neville got the second off a centre from J. D'Sa, the right-winger.

HAT-TRICK
Neville completed his hat-trick in the eighth minute off a forward pass.

Then, a minute later, J. D'Sa notched the fourth goal after doubling past two defenders, off Neville's spadework.

Ten minutes before the end, Martin D'Souza put the finishing touches to a rebound shot by Neville D'Souza.

HEMU ADHIKARI BACK TO OLD FORM—CENTURY

POONA, September 21. AN unbeaten knock of 133 runs by former test cricketer Hemu Adhikari was the highlight of the Services's first innings in which they scored 201 runs in reply to 249 of the Non-Descript Cricket Club from Ceylon.

The rest of the time on the last day today of the two-day fixture at the Rajendrasinhji Institute Sports Stadium was played out in a holiday mood.

The visitors lost 58 runs for 7 wickets before declaring and the home team scored 65 for 3.

Hemu Adhikari's knock of 133 included 13 drives to the ropes, and indicated that the veteran has not at all lost his youthful power behind the strokes.

Former test captain Lala Amarnath, who assisted the Services, scored a delightful 32 and helped Adhikari to add 59 runs for the 6th wicket partnership.

Later, M. Vishveshwarayyar helped Adhikari, not only to add 46 runs for the ninth wicket partnership, but allowed him to steal the limelight of the play giving full co-operation to him to complete a century.

M. Francke was the most successful bowler for the visitors. Spinning the ball both ways and maintaining immaculate length he claimed 4 wickets for 56 runs in 32 overs of which 10 were maidens.

In another three minutes they lost another good chance. Raghavendra shot a ball a few inches wide. St. Xavier's took time to settle down and their attack started functioning well after fifteen minutes.

Out-side, the batsmen rushed down and connected a ball correctly to give St. Xavier's the all-important lead.

Resumption saw St. Xavier's play rough game and but for the timely and vigilant umpiring the visitors would have been a few times.

Matunga Athletic Club saw more of the ball in the second session but could not capitalise on this.

Earlier, Bombay Labour Welfare 'B' trounced St. Francis Goans by nine goals to two after leading 4-1 at half time. Outside-right Salian gave Labour Welfare the lead scoring two quick goals.

Less than ten minutes later and Nilas added two more before the interval.

The losers' only goal, before the break, was scored by inside-left Coutinho. Labour Welfare scored five more in the second half to complete their tally; the scorers were Nilas (3) Stanley and Siraj.

The first match of the evening, between Air India International and Times of India, was cancelled.
